BOOKS printed for J. OSBORN, in Paternoster Row;

And J. and J. RIVINGTON, in St. Paul's Church-yard.

1. Pamela; or, Virtue Rewarded. In a Series of familiar Letters, from a beautiful young Damsel to her Parents. And afterwards, in her Exalted Condition, between her and Persons of Figure and Quality, upon the most Important and Entertaining Subjects in Genteel Life. In Four Volumes 8vo. Published in order to cultivate the Principles of Virtue and Religion in the Minds of the Youth of both Sexes. Adorned with 29 Copper-Plates, designed and engraved by Mr. Hayman and Mr. Gravelot. Price bound 1 l. 4 s.

2. Pamela; or, Virtue Rewarded. In Four Volumes

12mo. Price bound 12 s.

3. Pamela; ou, La Vertu Recompenseé. Traduit de

l'Angloise. En Deux Tomes. Price 6 s.

4. ÆSOP's Fables. With instructive Morals and Reslections, abstracted from Party Considerations, adapted to all Capacities; and designed to promote Religion, Morality, and universal Benevolence. Containing 240 Fables, with a Cut ingraved in Copper to each Fable. And the Life of Æsop presixed. Price 25. 6 d.

N. B. Tois is the Æ sop referred to in several Parts of Pamela.

5. Revelation examined with Candour; or, A fair Inquiry into the Sense and Use of the several Revelations expressly declared, or sufficiently implied, to be given to Mankind from the Creation, as they are found in the Bible. By a professed Friend to an honest Freedom of Thought in religious Inquiries. In 2 Volumes.

6. An Historical Account of the Life and Reign of David King of Ifrael. Interspersed with various Conjectures, Digressions, and Disquisitions. In which (among other Things) Mr. Bayle's Criticisms upon the Conduct and Character of that Prince are fully considered. In 2 Volumes. By the Author of Revelation examined with Candour.

7. Fifteen Sermons upon Social Duties. By the Author of the Life of David.

BOOKS printed for J. OSBORN, in Paternoster Row;

And J. and J. RIVINGTON, in St. Paul's Church-yard.

1. Pamela; or, Virtue Rewarded. In a Series of familiar Letters, from a beautiful young Damsel to her Parents. And afterwards, in her Exalted Condition, between her and Persons of Figure and Quality, upon the most Important and Entertaining Subjects in Genteel Life. In Four Volumes 8vo. Published in order to cultivate the Principles of Virtue and Religion in the Minds of the Youth of both Sexes. Adorned with 29 Copper-Plates, designed and engraved by Mr. Hayman and Mr. Gravelot. Price bound 1 l. 4 s.

2. Pamela; or, Virtue Rewarded. In Four Volumes

12mo. Price bound 12 s.

3. Pamela; ou, La Vertu Recompenseé. Traduit de

l'Angloise. En Deux Tomes. Price 6 s.

4. ÆSOP's Fables. With instructive Morals and Reslections, abstracted from Party Considerations, adapted to all Capacities; and designed to promote Religion, Morality, and universal Benevolence. Containing 240 Fables, with a Cut ingraved in Copper to each Fable. And the Life of Æsop presixed. Price 25. 6 d.

N. B. Tois is the Æ sop referred to in several Parts of Pamela.

5. Revelation examined with Candour; or, A fair Inquiry into the Sense and Use of the several Revelations expressly declared, or sufficiently implied, to be given to Mankind from the Creation, as they are found in the Bible. By a professed Friend to an honest Freedom of Thought in religious Inquiries. In 2 Volumes.

6. An Historical Account of the Life and Reign of David King of Ifrael. Interspersed with various Conjectures, Digressions, and Disquisitions. In which (among other Things) Mr. Bayle's Criticisms upon the Conduct and Character of that Prince are fully considered. In 2 Volumes. By the Author of Revelation examined with Candour.

7. Fifteen Sermons upon Social Duties. By the Author of the Life of David.

LETTERS

Written TO and FOR

PARTICULAR FRIENDS,

On the most 1479 a 17

Important Occasions.

Directing not only the Requisite

STYLE and FORMS

To be Observed in WRITING

Familiar Letters;

But How to

THINK and ACT Justly and Prudently,

INTHE

COMMON CONCERNS

OF

HUMAN LIFE.

CONTAINING

One Hundred and Seventy-three LETTERS.

The THIRD EDITION.

LONDON:

Printed for J. OSBORN, in Pater-noster Row; J. and J. RIVINGTON, in St. Paul's Church-yard; and J. LEAKE, at Bath. M. DCC. XLVI.

PAE

00

E I n n I to d

th the L

Losianie en

of to be dis

ronivit (per . Kangaran Kabu

PREFACE.

HE following. Letters are publish'd at the Solicitation of particular Friends, who are of Opinion, that they will answer several good

Ends, as they may not only direct the Forms requisite to be observed on the most important Occasions; but, what is more to the Purpose, by the Rules and Instructions contained in them, contribute to mend the Heart, and improve the Understanding.

NATURE, PROPRIETY OF CHARAC-TER, PLAIN SENSE, and GENERAL USE, have been the chief Objects of the Author's Attention in the Penning of these Letters; and as he every-where aimed to write to the Judgment, rather than to the Imagination, he would chuse, that they should generally be found more useful

A 2

than

than diverting: Tho' where the Subjects require Strokes of Humour, and innocent Raillery, it will be seen, perhaps, that the Method he has taken, was the Effect of Choice, and not merely of Necessity.

The Writer is no Friend to long Prefaces; but it may be necessary, however, to say, what he has aimed at in this Performance; and to leave his Merit in the Execution of it, to proper Judges.

He has endeavour'd then, in general, throughout the great Variety of his Subjects, to inculcate the Principles of Virtue and Benevolence; to describe properly, and recommend strongly, the Social and Relative Duties; and to place them in such practical Lights, that the Letters may serve for Rules to Think and Act by, as well as Forms to Write after.

Particularly, he has endeavoured to point out the Duty of a Servant, not a Slave; the Duty of a Master, not a Tyrant; that of the Parent, not as a Person morose and sour, and hard to be pleased; but mild, indulgent, kind, and such an one as would rather govern by Persuasion than Force.

I

PREFACE.

ts

nt

ne

of

2-

r,

r-ne

1,

)-

10

y,

d

n

rs

T

to a

v-

n

1;

in 12

[e

He has endeavour'd to direct the young Man in the Choice of his Friends and Companions; to excite him to Diligence; to discourage Extravagance, Sottishness, and Vice of all Kinds.

He has aimed to set forth, in a Variety of Cases, to both Sexes, the Inconveniencies attending unsuitable Marriages; to expose the Folly of a litigious Spirit; to console the Unhappy; to comfort the Mourner: And many of these by Arguments, tho' easy and familiar, yet new and uncommon.

With regard to the Letters of Court-(hip, the Author has aimed to point out fuch Methods of Address, to a young Man, as may stand the Test of the Parents Judgment, as well as the Daughter's Opinion; and, at the same time, that they should not want the proper Warmth of Expression, which Complaisance, and Pasfion for the beloved Object, in spire (and is fo much expected in Addresses of this Nature), they thould have their Foundation laid in common Sense, and a manly Sincerity; and, in a Word, be such as a prudent Woman need not blush to receive, nor a discreet Man be ashamed to look back back upon, when the doubtful Courtship is changed into the matrimonial Certainty.

PREFACE.

With this View he has also attempted to expose the empty Flourishes, and incoherent Rhapsodies, by which shallow Heads, and designing Hearts, endeavour to exalt their Mistresses into Goddesses, in hopes of having it in their Power to sink them into the Characters of the most Credulous and Foolish of their Sex.

Orphans, and Ladies of independent Fortunes, he has particularly endeavour'd to guard against the insidious Arts of their flattering and selfish Dependents, and the clandestine Addresses of Fortune-hunters, those Beasts of Prey, as they may well be called, who spread their Snares for the innocent and thoughtless Heart.

These, among other no less material Objects, have been the Author's principal Aim: How well he has succeeded, must, as has been hinted, be lest to the Judgment of the candid Reader.

p is ted love in ink

r'd eir the rs, be ial cal ft,

E

THE

CONTENTS

OFTHE

LETTERS.

작가 가는 하는 것이 모든 것이 하는 사람이 하는 것이 되는 것이 되었다. 그런
1.70 a Father, against putting a Youth of but moderate Parts to a Profession that requires more extensive Abilities. Page	e extensive Abilities. Page	1
II. From an Uncle to a Nephew, on his keeping back	d
Company, bad Hours, &c. in his Apprenticeship.	5
III. From a Widow-Mother, in Answer to her Son'	5 complaining of Hardships in his Apprenticeship.
IV. From an Uncle to the Youth, on the Same Occa	• sion.
V. From an Apprentice to an Uncle, about a Frau	d
vI. The Uncle's Answer.	2
VI. The Uncle's Answer.
VII. Advice from a Father to a young Beginner, wha	t
Company to chuse, and how to behave in it. I VIII. General Rules for agreeable Conversation in young Man. From a Father to a Son. I 1X. An elder to a younger Brother, who is in Low with a young Lady of great Gaiety, &c. 1
X. An elder to an extravagant younger Brother. 2
XI. To a young Man too foon keeping a Horse. 2
XII. Against a Sudden Intimacy, or Friendship, wit	20
one of a short Acquaintance.
XIII. A young Man in Business, to a Father, de	2
firing Leave to address his Daughter. 2	_

XIV. To the Daughter (on the Father's Allowance)	, apprifing her of his intended Visit. Page 2	7
XV. From a young Lady to her Father, acquainting	g him with a Proposal of Marriage made to her. 2
XVI. The Father's Answer, on a Supposition, tha	t he approves not of the young Man's Addresses. 2	9
XVII. The Father's Answer, on a Supposition, that	_ he does not disapprove of them.	0
XVIII. The young Gentleman to the Father, apprise ing him of his Affection for his Daughter. 3 Commendation of the young Gentleman.
XX. From the Father, in Answer to the young Gen
. 7	-
XXI. From the young Gentleman to his Mistress, or) n her Arrival at her Father's.
XXII. From a Brother to his Sifter in the Country upbraiding her for being negligent in Writing. 30
XXIII. In Answer to the preceding.	7
XXIV. From the Daughter to her Mother, in Ex	- cuse for her Neglect.	3
XXV. From a Son-in-law to his Wife's Father	, acquainting him with his Wife's Illness. ibid XXVI. From a Country Chapman beginning Trade to a City Dealer, offering his Correspondence. 39	9 XXVII. In Answer to the foregoing.)
XXVIII. From a Maid-servant in Town, acquaint ing her Father and Mother in the Country with Proposal of Marriage, and asking their Consents ibid
XXIX. From the Parents, in Answer to the pre-	• ceding. 4
XXX. From the same, acquainting her Parents with her Marriage. ibid	-
XXXI. Recommending a Superior Man-servant. 42 XXXII. Recommending a Wet-nurse. 43	2
XXXII. Recommending a Wet-nurse. XXXIII. Recommending a Gook-maid. ibid
XXXIV. Re-

그렇게 되는 것이 되었다. 그들은 이 나는 이 사람이 되는 것이 되었다면 하면 하지 않는데 되었다면 없었다.
XXXIV. Recommending a Chamber-maid	. Page 44
XXXV. Recommending a Nursery-maid.	ibid
XXXV. Recommending a Nursery-maid. XXXVI. A Father to a Son, to dissuade	bim from the Vice of Drinking to Excess.	45
XXXVII. The same Subject pursued.	47
XXXVIII. From an Apprentice to his Ma
ging Forgiveness for a great Misdemean	our. 49
XXXIX. The Master's Answer.	50
XL. From an Apprentice to his Friends, i	n Praise of his Master and Family.	51
XLI. Another from an Apprentice, where the	e Master is too remis in his own Affairs.	52
XLII. To a Country Correspondent, modestly	y requesting a Balance of Accounts between them.	53
XLIII. In Answer to the preceding.	ibid.
XLIV. A more pressing and angry Letter
City Dealer on the same Account.	54
XLV. In Answer to the preceding. XLVI. To a young Trader generally in a Hur	rv in Ru-finess, advising Method as well as Dilige XLVII. From a Son reduced by his own I gance, requesting his Father's Advice, or	n bis Intention to turn Player.	59
XLVIII. The Father's Answer, setting f	forth the Inconveniencies and Disgrace attending	the Profession of a Player.	60
XLIX. To a Brother too captious to bear the Ridicule he practises upon others.	61
L. To a Friend, on his Recovery from a d Illnefs.	ibid.
LI. On the same Occasion.	64
III. In Answer to the preceding.
LIII. To a young Lady, advising her not to	indestine
her Guardians, nor to encourage any cla	ibid.
LIV. From a Mother to a Daughter, jealor
Husband.	67
	V The

LV. The Subject continued.	Page 68
L.VI. From a tender Father to an ungracious
LVII. The Son's dutiful Answer.	74
LVIII. To a Friend, on Occasion of his not ing his Letters.	76
LIX. In Answer to the preceding.	ibid.
LX. From a Father to a Son, on his Negliger	ice in his Affairs.
LXI. The Son's grateful Answer.	77 78
LXII. A young Woman in Town to her Sist	er in the Country, recounting her narrow Escape	from a
Snare laid for ber on her first Arrival, by	wicked
Procure/s.	79
LXIII. To a Daughter in a Country Town, courages the Address of a Subaltern [A frequent in Country Towns].	84
LXIV. Expostulations from a grave Fri	end to a young Man, on his slighting and irreveren	t Bena-viour to his Father.	86
LXV. Against too great a Love of Singing of	ina iviu-
J. VII From a Daughten to how Eather	90
LXVI. From a Daughter to her Father, for her Sifter, who had married without fent.
LXVII. The Father's Answer.	93 94
LXVIII. To a Brother, against making h	is Wife and Children the constant Subject of F	raise in Conversation.	95
LXIX. From a Father to a Daughter, in I her Intention to marry at too early an Age.	97
LXX. From a Father to a Daughter a frothy French Lover.	99
LXXI. A modest Lover, desiring an Aunt's	Favour to her Niece.	100
LXXII. The Aunt's Answer, Supposing the	Gentleman deserves Encouragement.	101
LXX	III. The

68 71 74 er-76 iid. his 77 78 the n a ked

79 entoo

84 0 a 86 1u-90 ing

93 94 ife in 95 e of 97 ft a

99 our

100 tle-

The

CONTENTS.
LXXIII. The Answer, supposing the Gentleman is not approved. Page 102 LXXIV. From a respectful Lover to his Mistress.
ibid.
LXXV. The Answer. 103
IXXVI Abumourous Epifle of neighbourly Occur-
LXXVI. A humourous Epistle of neighbourly Occur- rences and News, to a Bottle-Companion abroad.
Totales and Ivens, to a Bottle Companion abroads LXXVII. From a Nephew to his Aunt, on his flow Progress in a Courtship Affair. 108 LXXVIII. The Aunt's Answer, encouraging him to persevere. 110
LXXIX. A Gentleman to a Lady, professing an Aversion to the tedious Forms of Courtship. 111
LXXX. The Lady's Answer, encouraging a farther Declaration. 112
LXXXI, The Gentleman's Reply, more explicitly avowing his Palfion.
LXXXII. The Lady's Answer to his Reply, putting the Matter on a sudden Issue. 114 LXXXIII. A facetious young Lady to her Aunt, ridiculing her ferious Lover. ibid. LXXXIV. Her Aunt's Answer, reprehending her LXXXIV. Her Aunt's Answer, reprehending her ludicrous Turn of Mind. 117 LXXXV. From a Gentleman to his Mistress, resenting her supposed Coquetry. 119
LXXXVI. The Lady's angry Answer. 120
LXXXVII. The Gentleman's submissive Reply. 121
LXXXVIII. The Lady's forgiving Return. 122 LXXXIX. Ridiculing a romantick Rhapsody in Courtship. 123
XC. Against a young Lady's affecting manly Airs; and also censuring the modern Riding-habits. 124
XCI. A Father to a Daughter, relating to three Persons of different Characters proposed to him, each for her Husband; with his Recommendation of one in Years. 126 XCII. Her

XCII. Her Answer, d	utifully expostulating on th
Case.	Page 120
XCIII. His Reply, urge	ently enforcing, but not com pelling, her Compliand	re with his Desire. 130
XCIV. To a rich Wido	w Lady with Children, dif
Suading her from mar	rying a Widower of meaner
Degree, who has Chil	Idren also. 133
Instructions to young Orp	han Ladies, as well as others posals of Marriage made to pardians or Friends Consent.
	Mantua-makers, and other
Go-betweens.	126
XCV. From the young	Lady, to the clandestine Proposer of the Match.	141
XCVI. To a young Fell	ow who makes Love in a rohe Hand of a Friend. 142
XCVII. Another less aff	fronting on the same Occasion.
	143
XCVIII. Another still	less severe, but not encouraging.	Ibid:
	regular Address, when it is not thought proper who
C. Another for a Lady	referring to a Guardian, or chosen Friend.	ibid.
CI. Another to the same
CII. From a Town-Tena	ant to his Landlord, excusing
Delay of Payment.	ibid.
CIII. From a Country I	Tenant to the same Purpose.
ATT	146
CIV. The Landlord's An	fwer. ibid.
	er from a Steward on Delay
of Payment.	147
CVI. The poor Tenant's	moving Answer. ibid.
CVII. The Steward's Re	ply, giving more Time. 148
CVIII. The poor Man's	thankful Letter in Return.
OTT 4 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	149
CIX. An Offer of Affili	fance to a Friend, who has received

he

29 m-

30 ifner

33 rs, to

at,

36 ro-

4I

42 on.

43 ouid. t is or oid.

fing oid. ofe. 146 bid. elay

147 oid.

148 urn.

has ived

O O E E E E E E E E E E
received great Losses by a Person's Failure.	Page 150
CX. The Friend's Answer, accepting the kind	Offer.
	ibid.
CXI. The Friend's Answer, supposing he has t	10 Occasion for the Offer.	ICT
CXII. Of Consolation to a Friend in Priso	n for Debt.	ibid.
CXIII. In Answer to the preceding.	153
CXIV. To a Person of Note, in Acknowlegem	ent of great Benefits received.	154
CXV. Another for Favours of not so high, yet	a se-nerous Nature.	155
CXVI. An Excuse to a Person who wants to b	orrow
Money.	ibid.
CXVII. On the same Subject.	156
CXVIII. Another on the same.	ibid.
CXIX. To a Friend, in Compliance with hi
quest to borrow a Sum of Money.	ibid.
CXX. Another on the fame Occasion, limiting Payment to a certain Time.	157
CXXI. To a Friend, on a Breach of Promise	in not returning Money lent in his Exigence.	ibid.
CXXII. To a Friend, who had promised to Sum of Money, to answer a critical Exigence
drove it off to the last.	158
CXXIII. The Answer, excusing the Pain h
given his Friend by his Remissness.	159
CXXIV. To one who, upon a very short Acqu ance, and without any visible Merit, but Assur wants to borrow a Sum of Money.	160
cxxv. A Gentleman to a Lady, who humou resents his Mistress's Fondness of a Monkey	and
Indifference to himfelf	161
Indifference to himself. CXXVI. A Sailor to his betrothed Mistress.	162
CXXVII Har Anganar
CXXVII. Her Answer. CXXVIII. A Sea-Officer to his Wife.	164
CAAVIII. A Sea-Officer to bis Wife.	165
CXXI	X, A

CXXIX. A Wife to her Husband at Sea. Page 166
CXXX. To a Father, on his Neglect of his Childrens Education. 168
CXXXI. From a young Maiden, abandoned by her Lower for the Cabe of a greater Fortune
Lower for the Sake of a greater Fortune. 171 CXXXII. From a Gentleman to his Mistress, who, Seeing no Hopes of Success, respectfully withdraws his Suit.
CXXXIII. From a Lady to a Gentleman, who had obtained all her Friends Consent, urging him to decline his Suit to her.
CXXXIV. The Gentleman's Answer to the Lady's uncommon Request.
CXXXV. The Lady's Reply, in case of a Preposses-Jion. 177
CXXXVI. The Lady's Reply, in case of no Prepojsession, or that she chuses not to avow it. 178 CXXXVII. A Lady to a Gentleman of Superior Fortune, who, after a long Address in an honourable way, proposes to live with her as a Gallant. 179 CXXXVIII. A Father to a Daughter in Service, on hearing of her Master's attempting her Virtue. 181 CXXXIX. The Daughter's Answer. 182
CXL. To a Gentleman of Fortune, who has Children, disfuading him from a Second Marriage with a Lady much younger than himself. ibid. CXLI. The same Subject pursued. 185 CXLII. Against a Second Marriage, where there are Children on both Sides. 188 CXLIII. Against a second Marriage, where there are Children on one Side, and a Likelihood of more.
• 193
CXLIV. Advising a Friend against going to Law.
CXLV. To a young Lady, cautioning her against heeping Company quith a Contlamon of had Chakeeping Company with a Gentleman of bad Character. CXLVI. From CALVI, From

C

C

66

73 de-74 y's 76-77 of-77 of-78 on 81 82 en, 6 de de-79 de de-70 de dei88 here ore.

193 aw.

inst ha-

rom

CXLVI. From a Mother to her high-spirited Daug	h-
ter, who lives on uneasy Terms with her Husban	d.
Page 2	01
CXLVII. A Lady to her Friend, a young Wide
Lady, who, having buried a polite and excelle	ont
Husband, inclines to marry a less deserving Gent 05 CXLVIII. From a Gentleman, strenuously expost lating with an old rich Widow, about to marry	a 09
CXLIX. From a young Lady in Town to her Au	int
in the Country. 1. Describing the Tower, M.	0-12 CL. 2. Describing other remarkable Places in a about London and Westminster, which are gen 14
CLI. 3. Describing Chelsea Hospital, and Kensin	07-ton Polace	5
ton Palace. 2	17
CLII. 4. Describing Greenwich Park, and the Pa 18 20 22
CLV. 7. An Account of Westminster-Abbey. 2:	25
CLVI. 8. Account of Westminster-Abbey continu'	d.
2:	28
CLVII. 9. On a Concert, or Musical Entertai	n-
ment.	22
CLVIII. 10. On the Diversions of the Playhou	Se.
CLIX. 11. The Play, and the low Scenes of Harl	34
	36
CLX. From a Country Gentleman in Town, to	115
Brother in the Country, describing a publick Ex
cution in London.	39
Five Letters which passed between an Aunt and h	er
Niece, in relation to her Conduct in the Addres	les made her by two Gentlemen; one a gay flutteri	ng
milita	ry

military Coxcomb, the other a Man of Sense and Honour. Page 24: CLXI. I. From the Annt to the Niece, desiring he Niece's own Opinion of the two Lovers. ibid CLXII. 2. The Niece's Answer: Describing the Be haviour of the sensible Lover. 24: CLXIII. 3. Continuing the Description of the Be haviour of the same Gentleman; which occasion a Love-quarrel.
CLXIV. 4. From the same: Describing her fluttering Pretender. 248
CLXV. 5. From the Aunt, containing folid Advice and Cautions on this Occasion. 250 CLXVI. From a Lady to her false Lover, who, after having braved all his Friends Expostulations, at last is persuaded to abandon her for another of CLXVII. From a Gentleman to his Lady, whose Over-niceness in her House, and uneasy Temper with her Servants, make their Lives uncomfortable. 255 CLXVIII. From a Gentleman who in a small Fortune experiences the Slights of his Friends; but, being suddenly reputed to be rich, is oppressed with the fawning Careffes and Adulation of those who had before neglected him. 258 CLXIX. From one Brother to another, on the rash Marriage of a beloved Daughter of one of them, to a profligate young Fellow. 262 CLXX. The afflicted Father, in Answer to the preceding. 264
CLXXI. To a Father, on the Loss of his Son, who died under Age. 205
CLXXII. To a Father, on the Loss of a hopeful Son, who died at Man's Estate. 266 CLXXIII. To a Widow, on the Death of her Husband. 270

Familiar

to I fi

4

Familiar LETTERS

On the most

IMPORTANT OCCASIONS

IN

COMMON LIFE.

LETTER I.

To a Father, against putting a Youth of but moderate Parts to a Profession that requires more extensive Abilities.

Dear Sir,

OU pay me a Compliment, tho' a very obliging one, when, in the last Letter you favoured me with, you desire my Advice, with respect to the Disposition of your Son William; whom you are inclin'd to bring up to the Bar. If, in complying with your Request, I should say any thing you may not intirely approve, you will not have so much room to blame me, as your own wrong Choice of a Counsellor.

R

1 niliar

and 242 her bid. Be-243 Be-sions 245 Aut-

248 vice

250 uho,

ions,

253 phose with 255

For-

t,bewith

who 258 rash

hem,

262 the the 264

Son,

265

peful 266

ber

270

I need not now tell you, I have a good Opinion of Will; and think him a modest, grave, sober, Youth: But, for this very Reason, I hardly think him qualified for the Profession you would chuse for him; for, I doubt, he has neither Talents for the Law, nor ever will have the Presence of Mind neceffary to make a Figure at the Bar. In any smooth, eafy Business, he will probably succeed, and be a useful Member of the Commonwealth. And as he is not your eldest Son, I should, were it to me, put him to a Merchant; or, as we live in an Island, and Trade and Navigation are both our Riches and our Glory, I should not even scruple to put a second Son to a creditable wholefale Dealer, rather than fail; if he himself is not averse to such a Calling. For I know not (you'll excuse me, I'm fure) whether Will's Genius is equal to that of an universal Merchant: For, the various Springs of Commerce, the Seasons for chusing proper Commodities, and numberless Incidents that make a necessary Return of Gain precarious, are full Imployment for the strongest Judgment; as a Man, by one ill-chosen Venture, often loses more than he gains by feveral fuccessful ones.

But this Opinion of Will, should you think it just, will be no Obstacle to his succeeding in the World in some creditable easy Business. Tho' I think him unequal to the Part you seem inclinable to allot him; yet he is no Fool: And Experience teaches us, that, in some sorts of Business, ample Advantage may be made by very moderate Talents, with much Reputation. These are principally such Employments as merely consist in Buying with Prudence, and in Selling at a Market-profit: Hence we see several Wholesale Dealers gain large Fortunes with Ease and Credit, and without any other Secret than the plain Practice of Buying

ion

ber,

ink

for

the ned as me,

1 an e to ler,

uch

I'm

fan

es of om-

ke a

Im-

Jan.

n he nk it

1 the no' I nable

ence

mple

Ta-

inci-

Buyrket-

ealers

and ice of uying

Buying at the best Hand, paying for their Goods punctually, and vending them always for what they are. In Dealings of this Kind, the Fatigues are few, and clear well-kept Books are sufficient to shew, at any time, a Man's Loss or Gain; for which, generally speaking, less than One Forenoon in a Week is sufficient: And yet, by a constant Attention, in this easy manner, as good a Character, and, very often, more Money is to be gained than in Professions that require an extraordinary Genius, a perpetual Attention, and a close and intense Study; which very seldom succeeds neither: For fee you not of Hundreds of Lawyers, how very few of them make a Figure, or get genteel Bread? And how many, for want of Courage to appear at the Bar (who yet have good Parts and Knowledge in the Laws), are forced to confine themselves to Chamber-practice, in which it is a long time before they grow noted enough to make a tolerable Livelihood?

As to what you hint, of placing him in the Phyfick Tribe; I like this no better than the other. Consider only this one Thing, how long it is before he will be capable of entering into Bufiness. or Reputation, as a Physician, if he ever does it at all: For who chuses to trust his Health to a raw and unexperienced young Man? The Law requires a sprightly Impudence, if I may so say, the Phyfick Line a folemn one, in the Person who would make a Figure in either. And do you think, tho' Will is grave enough of Conscience, that he ever can come up to that important Deportment, that unblushing Parade, which is the very Essence of an English Physician? So he may, in either of the Professions, live over all his Days, and bequite unknown; for, as Practice in both Faculties is the best Teacher, and Theory a most uncertain Guide, he may live to be Forty or Fifty Years of Age, and not come into any Business that shall improve himself, or benefit his Confulters.

B 2

Whereas in the way I propose, no sooner is he come of Age, and fit to be trufted with the Management of any Affairs at all, but his Seven Years will be expired; and if he has not been wanting to himself in it (and if he be, he would have been much more fo in an abstruser Business), he will be enabled, with the Fortune you can bestow upon him, to enter upon the Stage of the World with great Advantage, and become directly, a necessary and an useful Member of the Community. And, my good Friend, when you and I recollect, that most of the noble Families in the Kingdom, as well as the genteel ones, had the Foundations of their Grandeur laid in Trade, I expect not, in such a Country as ours especially, that any Objection to my Advice will be form'd, either by you or your good Lady, on this Score, if you have not more dignificant Reasons proceeding from the Boy's Turn of Mind and Inclination; which, I think, should always be confulted on these Occasions. For tho' I hope it never will be so in your Case, yet nothing has been more common, than that of Two Sons, the Eldest brought up to the Estate, the other to Trade, in the Revolution of Twenty or Thirty Years, the latter, thro' the Extravagance of the former, has made himself Eldest, as I may say; for, by faving while the other has been spending, he has found Means to keep the Estate in the Family, tho' it has been transferr'd upon the youngest, and, as it has then proved, the worthiest Branch.

M

yo pro

am

Du

nar

as t

you are

ing

I

This, I think, deferves your Confideration; and by viewing Will in the same Light I do, that of a well-inclined Lad, of moderate Passions, great natural Modesty, and no soaring Genius, I believe you will think it best to dispose of him in such manner as may require no greater Talents than he is possessed of, and may, in due Time, make him appear in the Face of the World sully qualified for what he undertakes. I am, Sir,

Your very humble Servant.

LETTER II.

From an UNCLE to a NEPHEW, on his keeping bad Company, lad Hours, &c. in his Apprenticeship.

Dear Nephew,

e

-

gnenh

í,

at

as of ch to ur

re

rn

0 ng

to ty

or-

or, nas

no'

sit

and

fa

na-

you

will

I AM very much concerned to hear, that you are of late fallen into bad Company; that you keep bad Hours, and give great Uneafiness to your Master, and break the Rules of his Family: That when he expostulates with you on this Occasion, you return pert and bold Answers; and, instead of promising or endeavouring to amend, repeat the Offence; and have enter'd into Clubs and Societies of young Fellows, who set at nought all good Example, and make such Persons who would do their Duty, the Subject of their Ridicule, as Persons of marrow Minds, and who want the Courage to do as they do.

Let me, on this Occasion, expostulate with you, and set before you the Evil of the Way you are in.

In the first Place: What can you mean by breaking the Rules of a Family you had bound your-B 3 felf felf by Contract to observe? Do you think it is honest, to break thro' Engagements into which you have so solemnly entered; and which are no less the Rules of the Corporation you are to be one Day free of, than those of a private Family? Seven Years, feveral of which are elapfed, are not fo long a Term, but that you may fee it determined before you are over-fit to be trufted with your own Conduct: Twenty-one or Twenty-two Years of Age, is full early for a young Man to be his own Master, whatever you may think; and you may furely stay till then, at least, to chuse your own Hours, and your own Company; and, I fear, as you go on, if you do not mend your Ways, your Discretion will not then do Credit to your Choice. Remember, you have no Time you can call your own, during the Continuance of your Contract: And must you abuse your Master in a double Sense; rob him of his Time, especially if any of it be Hours of Business; rob him of his Rest; break the Peace of his Family, and give a bad Example to others? And all for what? Why to riot in the Company of a Set of Persons, who contemn, as they teach you to do, all Order and Discipline; who, in all Likelihood, will lead you into Gaming, Drinking, Swearing, and even more dangerous Vices, to the Unhinging of your Mind from your Business, which must be your future Support.

Consider, I exhort you, in time, to what these Courses may lead you. Consider the Affliction you will give to all your Friends, by your Continuance in them. Lay together the Substance of the Conversation that passes in a whole Evening, with your frothy Companions, after you are come from them; and restect what solid Truth, what useful Lesson, worthy of being inculcated in your

uture

fu

n

fo

m

th

do

w

to mo

In

future Life, that whole Evening has afforded you; and confider, whether it is worth breaking thro' all Rule and Order for? — Whether your prefent Conduct is fuch as you would allow in a Servant of your own? Whether you are so capable to pursue your Business with that Ardor and Delight next Morning, as if you had not drank, or kept bad Hours, over Night? If not, whether your Masser has not a double Loss and Damage from your missepent Evenings? Whether the taking of small Liberties, as you may think them, leads you not on to greater? for, let me tell you, you will not find it in your Power to stop when you will: And then, whether any Restraint at all will not in time be irkfome to you?

u

S

t

0

e

u

r

,

,

r

n

r

a

1

f

I have gone thro' the like Servitude with Pleafure and Credit. I found myfelf my own Master full foon for my Discretion: What you think of yourfelf I know not; but I with you may do as well for your own Interest, and Reputation too, as I have done for mine: And I'll affure you, I should not have thought it either creditable or honest to. do as you do. I could have stood the Laugh of an Hundred fuch vain Companions as you chuse, for being too narrow-minded to break through all moral Obligations to my Master, in order to shew the Bravery of a bad Heart, and what an abandon'd Mind dared to perpetrate. A bad Beginning feldom makes a good Ending, and if you were affured that you could stop when you came for yourself, which is very improbable, how will you answer it to Equity and good Conscience, that you will not do so for your Master? There is, let me tell you, more true Bravery of Mind in forbearing to do an Injury, than in giving Offence.

You are now at an Age, when you should study to improve, not divert, your Faculties. You should now lay in a Fund of Knowlege, that in time, when ripened by Experience, may make you a worthy Member of the Commonwealth. Do you think you have nothing to learn, either as to your Business, or as to the forming of your Mind? Would it not be much better to chuse the silent, the sober Conversation of Books, than of such Companions as never read or think? An Author never commits any but his best Thoughts to Paper; but what can you expect from the laughing noisy Company you keep, but frothy Prate, indigested Notions, and Thoughts so unworthy of being remember'd, that it is the greatest Kindness to forget them?

Let me intreat you then, my dear Kinsman, for your Family's fake, for your own fake, before it be too late, to reflect as you ought upon the Course you are enter'd into. By applying yourfelf to Books, instead of such vain Company, you will be qualified in time for the best of Company, and to be respected by all Ranks of Men. This will keep you out of unnecessary Expences, will employ all your leifure Time, will exclude a world of Temptations, and open and inlarge your Notions of Men and Things, and, finally, fet you above that wretched Company which now you feem so much delighted with. And one Thing let me recommend to you, That you keep a List of the young Men of your Standing within the Compass of your Knowlege, and for the next Seven Years observe what Fate will attend them: See, if those who follow not the Course you are so lately enter'd into, will not appear in a very different Light from those who do; and from the Industry and Prosperity of the one, and the Decay or Failure of the other (if their vain Ways do not blaft them before, or as foon as they begin the World), you'll find abundant Reason every Day to justify the Truth of the Observations I have thrown together. As nothing but my Affection for you could possibly influence me to these Expossulations, I hope for a proper Effect from them, if you would be thought well of by, or expect any Favour from,

Your loving Uncle.

Your Master will, at my Request, send me word of the Success of my Remonstrances.

LETTER III.

A Widow-Mother's Letter, in Answer to her Son's complaining of Hardships in his Apprenticeship.

Dear Billy,

d

d

r

11

e

-

;

,

n

V

y

y

I AM very forry to hear of the Difference between your Master and you. I was always asraid you would expect the same Indulgences you had met with at home; and as you know, that in many Instances, I have endeayoured to make any seeming Hardship as easy to you as I could, if this causes you to be harder to be satisfied, it would be a great Trouble to me. Your Uncle tells me, I am asraid with too much Truth, that the Indulgences you have received from me, have made your present Station more disagreeable than it would otherwise have been. What I have always done for you was intended for your Good, and nothing could so deeply afflict me as to see my Tenderness have a contrary Effect: Therefore, dear Child, to my con-

IO

flant Care for your Welfare, do not add the Sorrow of feeing it the Cause of your behaving worse than if it had not been bestow'd upon you; for as, before we put you to your Master, we had an extraordinary Character of him, from all his Neighbours, and those who dealt with him; and as Mr. Foseph, who is now out of his Time, gives him the best of Characters, and declares your Mistress to be a Woman of great. Prudence and good Conduct; I know not how to think they would use you ill in any respect. But consider, my Dear, you must not, in any Woman beside myself, expect to find a fond, and perhaps partial Mother; for, the little Failings which I could not fee in you, will appear very plain to other Perfons. My Love for you would make me wish you always with me; but as that is what your future Welfare will no way permit, and as you must certainly be a Gainer by the Situation you are now in, let a Defire to promote my Happiness, as well as your own, make every feeming Difficulty light; which, I hope, will appear much lighter for being what I intreat you to dispense with; who am

Your ever loving Mother.

I have defir'd your Uncle to interpose in this Matter, and he writes to you on this Occafion; and has promifed to fee Justice done you, in case your Complaints be reasonable.

Y

10

LETTER IV.

An Uncle's Letter to the Youth, on the same Occasion.

Coufin William,

I AM forry you should have any Misunderstanding with your Master: I have a good Opinion of him, and am unwilling to entertain a bad one of you. It is so much a Master's Interest to use his Apprentices well, that I am inclinable to think that when they are badly treated, it is oftener the Effect of Provocation than Choice. Wherefore, before I give myself the Trouble of interposing in your Behalf, I defire you will frictly inquire of yourfelf, whether you have not, by some Misconduct or other, provoked that Alteration in your Mafter's Behaviour of which you so mach complain. If, after having diligently complied with this Request, you affure me that you are not fenfible of having given Cause of Disgust on your Side, I will readily use my best Endeavours to reconcile you to your Master, or procure you another. But if you find yourfelf blameable, it will be better for you to remove, by your own Amendment, the Occasion of your Mafter's Displeasure, than to have me, or any other Friend, offer to plead your Excuse, where you know it would be unjust to defend you. If this should be your Case, all your Friends together could promise your better Behaviour, indeed; but as the Performance must even then be your own, it will add much more to your Character to pass thro' your whole Term without any Interposition between you. Weigh well what I have here faid; and remember that your future Welfare depends greatly on your present Behaviour. I am

Your loving Kinsman.

LETTER V.

An Apprentice to an Uncle, about a Fraud committed by his Fellow-Apprentice to their Master.

Dear Uncle,

T A M under greater Uneafiness than I am able to express: My Fellow-'prentice, for whom I had a great Regard, and from whom I have received many Civilities, has involved me in the deepest Affliction. I am unwilling to tell you, and yet I must not conceal it, that he has forfeited the Confidence reposed in him, by a Breach of Trust, to which he ungenerously gain'd my Consent, by a Pretence I did not in the least suspect. What must I do? My Master is defrauded: If I discover the Injury, I am fure to ruin a young Man I would fain think poffessed of some Merit; if I conceal the Injustice, I must at present share the Guilt, and hereaster be Partaker in the Punishment. I am in the greatest Agony of Mind, and beg your instant Advice, as you value the Peace of Your dutiful, tho' unfortunate Nephew.

LETTER VI.

The Uncle's Answer.

Dear Nephew,

YOUR Letter, which I just now received, gives me great Uneasines: And as any Delay in the Discovery may be attended with Consequences which will probably be dangerous to yourfelf, and disagreeable to all who belong to you; I charge charge you, if you value your own Happiness, and my Peace, to acquaint your Master instantly with the Injustice that has been done him; which is the only Means of vindicating your own Innocence, and preventing your being looked upon as an Accomplice in a Fact, to which I wish you may not be found to have been too far confenting. As to the unhappy young Man who has been guilty of fo fatal an Indiscretion, I wish, if the known Clemency and Good-nature of your Mafter may pardon this Offence, he may let his Forgiveness teach him the Ingratitude and Inhumanity of injuring a Man, who is not only the proper Guardian of his Youth, but whose Goodness deserves the best Behaviour. tho' he be generous enough to excuse the worst. Let not a Minute pass after you receive this, before you reveal the Matter to your Master: For I am in Hopes that your Application to me, and your following my Advice, will greatly plead in your Behalf. I will very speedily call on your Master, and am, as far as an honest Regard for you can make me,

Your loving Uncle.

LETTER VII.

Advice from a Father to a young Beginner, what Company to chuse, and how to behave in it.

Dear Robin,

od

d

ft

e

e

I

n

I

I

AS you are now entering into the World, and will probably have confiderable Dealings in your Business, the frequent Occasions you will have for Advice from others, will make you desirous of fingling

14 Familiar LETTERS on the fingling out among your most intimate Acquaintance, one or two, whom you would view in the

H

h

h

n

(

h

n

0

e

Light of Friends.

In the Choice of these, your utmost Care and Caution will be necessary: For, by a Mistake here, you can scarcely conceive the satal Essects you may hereaster experience: Wherefore, it will be proper for you to make a Judgment of those who are sit to be your Advisers, by the Conduct they have observed in their own Affairs, and the Reputation they bear in the World. For he who has by his own Indiscretions undone himself, is much fitter to be set up as a Land-mark for a prudent Mariner to shun his Courses, than an Example to follow.

Old Age is generally flow and heavy, Youth headstrong and precipitate; but there are old Men who are full of Vivacity, and young Men replenished with Discretion; which makes me rather point out the Condust than the Age of the Persons with whom you should chuse to associate; tho after all, it is a never-failing good Sign to me of Prudence and Virtue in a young Man, when his Seniors chuse his Company, and he delights in theirs.

Let your Endeavour therefore be, at all Adventures, to confort yourself with Men of Sobriety, good Sense and Virtue; for the Proverb is an unering one, that says, A Man is known by the Company he keeps. If such Men you can single out, while you improve by their Conversation, you will benefit by their Advice; and be sure remember one thing, that tho' you must be frank and unreserved in delivering your Sentiments, when Occasions offer, yet that you be much readier to hear than speak; for to this Purpose it has been significantly observed, that Nature has given a Man two Ears.

Ears, and but one Tongue. Lay in therefore by Observation, and a modest Silence, such a Store of Ideas, that you may, at their Time of Life, make no worse Figure than they do; and endeavour to benefit yourfelf rather by other Peoples Ills than your own. How must those young Men expose themselves to the Contempt and Ridicule of their Seniors, who, having feen little or nothing of the World, are continually shutting out by open Mouths, and closed Ears, all Possibility of Instruction, and making vain the principal End of Conversation, which is Improvement. A filent young Man makes generally a wife old one, and never fails of being respected by the best and most prudent Men. When therefore you come among Strangers, hear every one speak before you deliver your own Sentiments; by this means you will judge of the Merit and Capacities of your Company, and avoid exposing yourfelf, as I have known many do, by shooting out hasty and inconsiderate Bolts, which they would have been glad to recal, when perhaps a filent Genius in Company has burft out upon them with fuch Observations, as have struck Consciousness and Shame into the forward Speaker, if he has not been quite insensible of inward Reproach.

I have thrown together, as they occurr'd, a few Thoughts, which may suffice for the present to shew my Care and Concern for your Welfare. I hope you will constantly, from time to time, communicate to me whatever you shall think worthy of my Notice, or in which my Advice may be of Use to you. For I have no Pleasure in this Life equal to that which the Happiness of my Children gives me. And of this you may be assured; for

I am, and ever must be,

d

e ts

11

e

e

Your affectionate Father.

LETTER VIII.

General Rules for agreeable Conversation in a young Man. From a Father to a Son.

Dear William,

As I had not an Opportunity of faying so much to you as I wished when you were last here; I send this to inform you of some Things in your general Conversation, which I think would be proper for you to observe, and amend; particularly your excessive Itch for Talking; which discovers itself alike on all Occasions. I have always flatter'd myself, that you do not want Sense; and am willing to hope I have not been deceived: But the dangerous Self-sufficiency of most young Men, seems violently to have seized you, which, I hope, a

0

10

Va

18 er

YO

ad

ob

his

W

little Reflection will remove.

The Art of rendering yourfelf agreeable in Conversation is worth your serious Study: 'Tis an Advantage few can boaft, tho' fought after by all; and nothing is so constant an Enemy to Success in those who would excel in this Art, as the harbouring an Opinion of their own Profi iency, before they have attained to any tolerable Degree of Knowlege in what they imagine themselves posfeffed of. Conversation, where it is rightly managed, must be so conducted, as to let each Member of the Company have a Share in the Pleasure and Applause it affords: If you are Six in Number, after you have told a Story, or made any Remark which gives a general Satisfaction; you must confider it the Right of another to call your Attention in his Turn; and, unless particularly requested, it betrays a great Weakness to follow your self. No doubt but you love to be admired: And have not others

a

ch

;

ur

0-ly

rs

'd

1.

ne

ns

a

11 -

d-

1;

in

r-

re

of 1-1-

n-

re

r,

k

7 - on it

0

ot

others the same Passion? You believe your Wit more brilliant than theirs: Are you fure, that they are not of the same Opinion as to their own? If a Man speaks little, you must not from thence conclude him willing to give up every Claim to conversable Merit: Perhaps he cannot sing: But to be fure he is as defirous of having his peculiar Humour, or his dry foke, applauded, as you are to be intreated another Song. If he is no Mathematician, perhaps he is versed in religious Disputation; if he despises Plays, he may admire History; tho' he understands not Geography, he may yet know how to describe the Humours of Mankind: And tho' he pretends not to Politicks, he may have a Turn for some more useful Science. When these are confidered, if his Modesty is great, you cannot oblige him more than by throwing an Opportunity in his way to display his Capacity on the Subject he believes himself most able to handle with Advantage: For, in order to support a thorough good Humour, a Man must be pleased with himfelf as well as with others. When this is properly taken care of, Conversation seldom fails to prove entertaining: And to the Neglect of this, are owing many of the yawning Hours spent in Companies composed of Men not incapable of behaving agreeably.

The Manner of telling a Story is also worth your Notice: You have known the Pleasure of hearing a long one well told: Mr. Trotter has an admirable Talent in this way: But then you must observe, that half the Pleasure he gives, arises from his happily avoiding any of the silly Digressions, which are the great Cause of a Story's seeming tedious: You never hear him mingle his Relation with, I remember very well it was the same Day that 'Squire Trumbul's Son came of Age. -- I bought my bay Nag the very Day before, at such a Fair, being a Friday that Year; --- or, I can scarce think of it without Laughing; --- But, however, as I was saying: --- And a hundred more such Dead-weights to Attention. Nor does he ever praise a Story before he relates it; a satal Rock to many a good Relation: For when a Story wants a preparatory Recommendation, it ought not to be told; and even when the Relation is possible, the Generality of Auditors are apt to persuade themselves,

The Mountain labours, and a Moufe is born.

These are loose and general Hints; but by a due Improvement of them, you will find yourself very sensibly grow more and more agreeable where-ever you converse. An Ease and becoming Freedom you already have, and by the Addition of Discretion in your Use of them, and Complaisance to others, you will probably succeed in the Desire so predominant in you, of being admired by Men of Sense and Judgment. Which will be no small Pleasure to

Your affectionate Father.

of

fu

of

be

he

an gr

no

air

ag

you

and

Co Hu afti par

wh

hap

Wi ftra

fati

 M_0

I a

LETTER IX.

An elder to a younger Brother, who is in Love with a young Lady of great Gaiety, &c.

Dear Brother,

I AM more concerned for your Welfare than you imagine. You are younger than myfelf: My Duty, in some Degree, requires my Care for your Good, and particularly in a Point that may be so material to your whole Life, as is that of Love.

Beauty has as great a Force upon my Senfes, as it can have upon yours. I am near Thirty Years of Age; you are not more than Twenty. Your Paffions are strong; mine, Brother, are far from fubliding: I admire, I love, with as much Force of Nature as you can do. My Reason ought to be stronger, and 'tis well if my Passion is not so likewife. Mifs Rooke is amiable on many Accounts; her Features are regular, her Wit sprightly, her Deportment genteel; and Voice, - I had almost faid, ravishing. Her Dress is easy and unaffected; and her Manner of Conversation has a Freedom that captivates more Hearts than yours: Yet, I greatly fear, with all these Endowments, she will not make the Wife you ought to wish for. Her airy Flights, and gay Behaviour, are pleafing, as a Partner in Conversation; but will they be equally agreeable in a Partner for Life? What now charms you, charms also others: You are now content with thinking yourfelf one among many that admire her, and are admitted to share the Brilliancy of her Conversation: But will a Share of her Wit and Humour, her Freedom and Gaiety, please hereafter as a Wife? And tho' she is delightful in Company, are you fatisfied she will be as agreeable when alone with you; or when the has not an Opportunity of shewing-away in a Company that perhaps you may not approve? She now fees nobody but whom the chuses to see: If she should be a Wife, it is more than probable she may dislike Restraints: And can you approve of a diffuse Converfation in one you defire to yourfelf?

Think not, Brother, that I have any interested Motive for this Advice. I assure you I have not. I am not your Rival: I desire not the Lady you feem too fond of. All I mean (for I say nothing at present, with regard to your own Youth, which ought not, however, to be wholly forgotten, as very sew prudent Matches are made by young Gentlemen at your Age) is, to caution you against thinking of a Gentlewoman who may, and I am willing to believe will, be a suitable Companion to a Gentleman whose Station and Choice leads him into much Company, and gay Life; but to Men whose Circumstances, if not their Inclinations, require a more retired way of Life, it is obvious, a Woman, whose Talents lie principally in Conversation, can never, for that Reason only, justify a young Gentleman for chusing her for a Wife.

I hope this will come time enough to put you upon guarding against the Inconveniencies that threaten the Indulgence of your present Passion. Shut not your Ears to Reason; forget not yourself; and be sure to remember, that the Pleasure of an Hour or Two, and of Twenty, Thirty, or Forty Years, or a whole Life, must arise from very different Sources. I am,

Dear Brother,

Your most affectionate, &c.

is

A

y

of

N

W

mi

po

LETTER X.

An elder to an extravagant younger Brother.

Dear John,

YOU may be certain, that your Misfortunes are to me a most melancholy Subject: You are my only Brother: I own it: And your Misfortunes affect affect me next to my own: But there is this Difference in what I feel for you, and for myfelf: I am fure, every Misfortune I have met with, has been occasioned by unavoidable Accidents. This Confideration has supported me under the many Afflictions I have myself endured: But for those I have shared with you, I cannot boast the same Alleviation. While our Father lived, he was your constant and unwearied Support, even after your Patrimony was fquander'd away. While our Mother remained, she was every Week affifting your Necessities, but what might more properly be called your Levity and Extravagance. She is now, by the Divine Will, taken from us both; her lointure, as well as the Estate my Father independently left, has devolved upon me. Of this both Nature and Providence require I should make the best Use: And to serve you, I readily confess, is my greatest Care. But, my dearest Brother, how is this to be done? The generous and bountiful Affistance of our Parents, procured you no subflantial Good. What then am I to do to screen you from Want and Mifery ? ---- That you are not already happy, is not owing to the Backwardness of your Friends to serve you; but, allow me to fpeak plainly, to your own Indifcretion. Your own Fortune maintained you not for three Years: Were I able to give you as much more, what Reason have you given me to suppose you will be a better Oeconomist than you have been? My whole Estate, let me_tell you, Brother, at your Rate of Expence, would scarcely maintain you for Seven Years: And, think you as you will, I must believe it my Duty to leave enough to support my Off-spring, with prudent Conduct, to the End of Time. If I fend you, as you defire, Fifty Guineas, What Good will that Sum procure you?

u

t

1.

1

y

re

re

es

It will but ferve to lengthen your Credit, and make you run deeper into Debt. I have affisted you before; and has not this always been the Case? And have not People given you Credit, because they think I will support you? 'Tis Time then, my dear Brother, to hold my Hand. But yet, be affured, that when I am convinced you have thoroughly abandon'd your prefent Courses, you shall find in me

A truly affectionate Brother, ci

N

W

fo

W

W of pa ac

vei th COL

En 210

Fo of fro

at inc offe

We.

oug it.

the

ftan

emp the

defr

And

Cre

diffe

thef

will

LETTER XI.

To a young Man too foon keeping a Horse.

Dear Tom,

I Always take great Pleasure in hearing of your Welfare, and of every thing that makes for your Satisfaction and Comfort : But give me Leave to fay, That I am forry to hear you have fo early begun to keep a Horse, especially as your Business is altogether in your Shop, and you have no End to ferve in riding out; and are, befides, young and healthy, and so cannot require it, as Exercise. And is it worth while, think you, to keep a Horse the whole Week, that you may have him at hand on a Sunday Morning, if the Day proves fair, and you have nothing to keep you in Town?

You must consider, that the here, in the Country, many common Tradefmen keep Horses, the Expence is but small to them; and the Distance of one Customer from another, in a manner, obliges them to it. But this can be no Plea for you; And if you do not want a Horse for Exer-cife,

cife, you can only alledge the worst Reason in the World for your maintaining one; that your Neighbours all around you do the fame: For, look who they are, and what their Motives, and you'll foon fee the Difference, and that their Example will not justify you. Mr. Thompson, for Instance, who lives next Door to you, is near Sixty Years of Age, of a pretty groß Constitution, and capable of no other Exercise; and moreover he had acquired, by Length of Time, and Industry, an ample Fortune, before he gave himfelf this Di-Mr. Jenkins has an Estate fallen to him. that fets him above the Want of Trade; and his continuing in it, is rather an Amusement than an Employment. Mr. Jackson, Mr. West, Mr. Trozier, and Mr. Kent, are all Men of established Fortunes; and when you are as old as the youngest of them, and can as well afford it, I would be far from diffuading you from keeping a Horse. But at prefent, you may depend upon it, you rather incur their Contempt, than gain their Esteem, by offering to appear their Equal, when they and you well know, in what relates to Expences, you ought not to be fo, nor have you had a Time for it. The lower Part of the World may, perhaps, fhew you more Respect for those Marks of Substance; but should a Time come (and who is exempt from Misfortunes?) when they must know they were the Effects of unthinking Levity; how despicable must you then appear in their Eyes! And let me tell you, that the Esteem of Persons of Credit and Understanding, must be gained by very different Means from Shew or Equipage; for with these, Modesty, Prudence, and good Sense only, will ever prevail.

ır

r

re

y ſs

d

nd

e.

ſe

nd

id

he

S, ce

or,

r-

24 Familiar LETTERS on the

Besides, the Expence of the Horse is not the least thing to be considered: It will in time, very probably, lead you into a more dangerous one, that of bestowing too much of your Time in the Use of it. It will unhinge your Mind, as I may say, from Business, and give your Servants Opportunity to be remiss in your Absence. And as you are a young Man, it is fit that you should lay up, by your Industry, against a more advanced Age, when the Exercise a Horse affords, will seem not only more suitable, but perhaps absolutely necessary to your Health; whereas, now, it may rather pass for Wantonness and Affectation.

You are not without a tolerable Share of Reafon; let me prevail with you to use it: Sell your Horse, and sear not being laugh'd at on that Account; for it will be a Credit to you more ways than one, to say, That your Business would not allow you Time to use it. And it would argue, besides, great Perverseness, to continue in an Error, for no other Reason than to support a wrong Judgment at first setting out: And your reducing an unnecessary Expence in good time, will more than recover any good Opinion you may have lost by running in it.

Your prudent Use of this Advice will, as it must tend to your Good, be a great Satisfaction to Your ten lerly affectionate Father.

til

kı

fta

alı

W

mi

30%

Gi

Wil

Wh

dia

cor

or . De

tualits (Ma) fran Ope of L

LETTER XII.

Against a sudden Intimacy, or Friendship, with one of a short Acquaintance.

Cousin Tom,

y ru e, ot

ry

ass

aur

C-

IVS

ot

ie,

Er-

ng

ing

ore loft

s it

tion

her.

T.

I AM just setting out for Windsor, and have not time to fay fo much as I would on the Occasion upon which I now write to you. I hear that Mr. Douglas and you have lately contracted fuch an Intimacy, that you are hardly ever afunder; and as I know his Morals are not the best, nor his Circumflances the most happy, I fear he will, if he has not already done it, let you fee, that he better knows what he does in feeking your Acquaintance, than you do in cultivating bis.

I am far from defiring to abridge you in any neceffary or innocent Liberty, or to prescribe too much to your Choice of a Friend: Nor am I against your being complaisant to Strangers; for this Gentleman's Acquaintance is not yet a Month old with you; but you must not think every Mart whose Conversation is agreeable, fit to be immediately treated as a Friend: Of all Sorts, hastilycontracted Friendships promise the least Duration or Satisfaction; as they most commonly arise from Delign on one Side, and Weakness on the other. True Friendship must be the Effect of long and mutual Esteem and Knowlege: It ought to have for its Cement, an Equality of Years, a Similitude of Manners, and, pretty much, a Parity in Circumstance and Degree. But, generally speaking, an Openness to a Stranger carries with it strong Marks of Indifferetion, and not feldom ends in Repentance.

For these Reasons, I would be glad you would be upon your Guard, and proceed cautiously in this new Alliance. Mr. Douglas has Vivacity and Humour enough to please any Man of a light Turn; but were I to give my Judgment of him, I should pronounce him fitter for the Tea-table, than the Cabinet. He is smart, but very superficial; and treats all serious Subjects with a Contempt too natural to bad Minds; and I know more young Men than one, of whose good Opinion he has taken Advantage, and has made them wifer, though at their own Expence, than he found them.

The Caution I here give you, is the pure Effect of my Experience in Life, some Knowlege of your new Associate, and my Affection for you. The Use you make of it will determine, whether you merit this Concern from

Your affectionate Kinsman.

tho

An

cep

nex

pro

has less,

appe

that

Mag

LETTER XIII.

A young Man in Business, to a Father, desiring Leave to address his Daughter.

SIR,

I HOPE the Justness of my Intentions will excuse the Freedom of these sew Lines, whereby I am to acquaint you of the great Affection and Esteem I have for your Daughter. I would not, Sir, offer at any indirect Address, that should have the least Appearance of Inconsistency with her Duty to you, and my honourable Views to her; chusing, by your Instuence, if I may approve myself to you worthy of that Honour, to commend myself to her Approbation.

Approbation. You are not infensible, Sir, by the Credit I have hitherto preserved in the World, of my Ability, by God's Blessing, to make her happy: And this the rather emboldens me to request the Favour of an Evening's Conversation with you, at your first Convenience, when I will more fully explain myself, as I earnestly hope, to your Satisfaction, and take my Encouragement or Discouragement from your own Mouth. I am, Sir, mean time, with great Respect,

Your most obedient humble Servant.

LETTER XIV.

To the Daughter (on the Father's Allowance) apprising her of his intended Visit.

MADAM,

d

d

n

r

r

it

7.

g

K-

Dy

nd

t, ve

ty

g,

ou er I HAVE ventured to make known to your honoured Father, the great Defire I have to be thought worthy of a Relation to him by your Means. And, as he has not discouraged me in the Hopes I have entertained, that I may possibly be not unacceptable to him, and to all your worthy Family, I propose to do myself the Honour of a Visit to you next Monday. Though he has been so good as to promise to introduce me, and I make no doubt has acquainted you with it; I give you, nevertheles, the Trouble of these Lines, that I might not appear wanting in any outward Demonstration of that inviolable Respect with which I am, dear Madam,

Your most devoted humble Servant.

LETTER XV.

From a young Lady to her Father, acquainting him with a Proposal of Marriage made to her.

Honoured Sir, Nottingham, April 4. THINK it my Duty to acquaint you, that a Gentleman of this Town, by Name Derham, and by Bufiness a Linen-draper, has made some Overtures to my Cousin Morgan, in the way of Courtship to me. My Cousin has brought him once or twice into my Company, which he could not well decline doing, because he has Dealings with him, and has an high Opinion of him and his Circumstances. He has been set up Three Years, and has very good Business, and lives in Credit and He is about Twenty-feven Years old, and a likely Man enough: He feems not to want Sense on Manners; and is come of a good Family. He has broke his Mind to me, and boafts how well he can maintain me: But, I affure you, Sir, I have given him no Encouragement; and told him, that I had no Thoughts of changing my Condition, yet awhile; and should never think of it but in Obedience to my Parents; and I defired him to talk no more on that Subject to me. Yet he resolves to persevere, and pretends extraordinary Affection and Esteem. I would not, Sir, by any means, omit to acquaint you with the Beginnings of an Affair, that would be want of Duty in me to conceal from you, and shew a Guilt and Disobedience unworthy of the kind Indulgence and Affection you have always shewn to, Sir, ra

hi

th

 \mathbf{C}_0

yo

thi

My humble Duty to my honour'd Mother, Love to my Brother and Sister; and Respects to all Friends. Cousin Morgan, and his Wise and Sister, desire their kind Respects. I cannot speak enough of their Civility to me.

LETTER XVI.

The Father's Answer, on a Supposition that he approves not of the young Man's Addresses.

I HAVE received your Letter dated the 4th Instant, wherein you acquaint me of the Proposals made to you, thro' your Cousin Morgan's Recommendation, by one Mr. Derham. I hope, as you assure me, that you have given no Encouragement to him: For I by no means approve of him for your Husband. I have inquired of one of his Townsmen, who knows him and his Circumstances very well; and I am neither pleased with them, nor with his Character; and wonder my Cousin would so inconsiderately recommend him to you. Indeed, I doubt not Mr. Morgan's good Intentions; but I insist upon it, that you think no-

1

e

0 n

n

-

e

n

Your indulgent Father.

Your Mother gives her Bleffing to you, and joins with me in the above Advice. Your Brother and Sifter, and all Friends, fend their Love and Respects to you.

thing of the Matter, if you would oblige

LETTER XVII.

The Father's Answer, on a Supposition that he does not disapprove of the young Man's Addresses.

My dear Daughter, Northampt. Apr. 10. IN Answer to yours of the 4th Instant, relating to the Addresses of Mr. Derham, I would have you neither wholly encourage nor discourage his Suit; for if, on Inquiry into his Character and Circumstances, I shall find, that they are answerable to your Cousin's good Opinion of them, and his own Affurances, I know not but his Suit may be worthy of Attention. But, my Dear, confider, that Men are deceitful, and always put the best Side outwards; and it may possibly, on the strict Inquiry, which the Nature and Importance of the Cafe demands, come out far otherwife than it at prefent appears. Let me advise you therefore, to act in this Matter with great Prudence, and that you make not yourfelf too cheap; for Men are apt to flight what is too easily obtained. Your Cousin will give him Hope enough, while you don't absolutely deny him; and in the mean time, he may be told, that you are not at your own Disposal, but intirely refolved to abide by my Determination and Direction, in an Affair of this great Importance: And this will put him upon applying to me, who, you need not doubt, will in this Case, as in all others, study your Good; as becomes

Your indulgent Father.

Your Mother gives her Bleffing to you, and joins with me in the above Advice. Your Brother and Sifter, and all Friends, fend their Love and Respects to you.

L E T-

1%

I hiad Modern Casu denote the casto your nour I will my E Thre the T

you,

conv

I hav appea of a c my C

impro This, you w

XVIII. LETTER

The young Gentleman's Letter to the Father, apprifing him of his Affection for his Daughter.

Notlingham, April 12. SIR,

1

n

t

H

t

e

t

1, 11

t

r

.

d

I TAKE the Liberty, tho' personally unknown to you, to declare the great Value and Affection I have for your worthy Daughter, whom I have had the Honour to fee at my good Friend Mr. Morgan's. I should think myself intirely unworthy of her Favour, and of your Approbation, if I could have a Thought of influencing her Resolution but in Obedience to your Pleasure; as I should, on such a Supposition, offer an Injury likewise to that Prudence in herself, which, I flatter myself, is not the least of her amiable Perfections. If I might have the Honour of your Countenance, Sir, on this Occasion, I would open myself and Circumstances to you, in that frank and honest manner which should convince you of the Sincerity of my Affection for your Daughter, and at the same time of the Honourableness of my Intentions. In the mean time, I will in general fay, That I have been fet up in my Business in the Linen-drapery Way, upwards of Three Years; that I have a very good Trade for the Time: That I had 1000 l. to begin with, which I have improved to 1500 l. as I am ready to make appear to your Satisfaction: That I am descended of a creditable Family; have done nothing to stain my Character; and that my Trade is still further improveable, as I shall, I hope, inlarge my Bottom. This, Sir, I thought but honest and fair to acquaint you with, that you might know something of a Perfon, who sues to you for your Countenance, and that of your good Lady, in an Affair that I hope may prove one Day the greatest Happiness of my Life; as it must be, if I can be blessed with that, and your dear Daughter's Approbation. In Hope of which, and the Favour of a Line, I take the Liberty to subscribe myself, good Sir,

32 Familiar LETTERS on the

Your most obedient humble Servant.

t

ra

of

m

th

no

VIC

ne

ftr

he

th:

cli

my tha

wh

the

COL

LETTER XIX.

From the Cousin to the Father and Mother, in Commendation of the young Gentleman.

Dear Cousins, Nottingham, April 12. GIVE you both Thanks for fo long continuing with us the Pleasure of Cousin Polly's Company. She has intirely captivated a worthy Friend of mine, Mr. Derham, a Linen-draper of this Town. And I would have acquainted you with it myfelf, but that I knew and advised Cousin Polly to write to you about it; for I would not for the World any thing of this fort should be carried on unknown to you, at my House, especially. Mr. Derham has shewn me his Letter to you; and I believe every Tittle of it to be true; and really, if you and my Cousin approve it, as also Cousin Polly, I don't know where she can do better. I am sure I should think fo, if I had a Daughter he could love.

Thus much I thought myself obliged to say; and, with my kind Love to your other Self, and all my Cousins, as also my Wife's, and Sister's, I remain

Your affectionate Cousin.

LETTER XX.

From the Father, in Answer to the young Gentleman.

SIR, Northampton, April 16.

I HAVE received yours of the 12th, and am obliged to you for the good Opinion you express of my Daughter. But I think she is yet full young to alter her Condition, and imbark in the Cares of a Family. I cannot but fay, that the Account you give of yourfelf, and your Application to me, rather than first to try to engage the Affections of my Daughter, carry a very honourable Appearance, and fuch as must be to the Advantage of your Character. As to your Beginning, Sir, that is not to be so much looked upon, as the Improvement; and I doubt not, that you can make good Proof of what you affert on this Occasion. But still I must needs fay, that I think, and so does her Mother, that it is too early to incumber her with the Cares of the World; and as I am fure she will do nothing in fo important an Affair without our Advice, so I would not, for the World, in a Case so nearly concerning her, and her future Welfare, constrain her in the least. I intend shortly to send for her home, for she has been longer absent from us than we intended; and then I shall consult her Inclinations; and you will excuse me to say, for she is my Daughter, and a very good Child, tho' I fay it, that I shall then determine myself by that, and by what shall appear to offer most for her Good. In the mean time, Sir, I thank you for the Civility and commendable Openness of Yours; and am

Your humble Servant.

34 Familiar LETTERS on the

The Father in this Letter referring pretty much to the Daughter's Choice, the young Gentleman cannot but confirue it as an Encouragement to him, to profecute his Addresses to her; in which he doubles his Diligence (on the Hint that she will soon return to Nottingham), in order to gain a Footing in her good Will; and she, finding her Father and Mother not averse to the Affair, ventures to give him some Room to think his Addresses not indifferent to her; but still altogether on Condition of her Parents Confent and Approbation. By the Time then that she is recall'd home (nothing disagreeable having appeared in the young Gentleman's Behaviour, and his general Character being confistent with his Pretensions), there may be supposed some Degree of Familiarity and Confidence to have pass'd between them; and she gives him Hope, that she will receive a Letter from him, tho' fhe will not promise an Answer; intirely referring to her Duty to her Parents, and their good Pleasure. He attends her on her Journey a good Part of the Way, as far as she will permit; and when her Cousin, his Friend, informs him of her fafe Arrival at Nottingham, he fends the following Letter.

fe

te

f fh

H

m hi

the to his W

Sin

LETTER XXI.

From the young Gentleman to his Mistress, on her Arrival at her Father's.

Dear Madam,

d

0 n

)-

d

A

is

is

-

e

e,

o'

r-ir

11

May 25.

more

I HAVE understood with great Pleasure your fafe Arrival at your Father's House; of which I take the Liberty to congratulate your good Parents, as well as your dear Self. I will not, Madam, fill: this Letter with the Regret I had to part with you, because I have no Reason nor Merit, at present, to expect that you should be concerned for me on this Score. Yet, Madam, I am not without Hope, from the Sincerity of my Affection for you, and the Honesty of my Intentions, to deserve, in time, those Regards which I cannot at present flatter myfelf with. As your good Father, in his kind Letter to me, assured me, that he should consult your Inclinations, and determine by them, and by what should offer most for your Good; how happy should I be, if I could find my humble Suit not quite indifferent to your dear Self, and not rejected by Him! If what I have already opened to him as to my Circumstances, be not unacceptable, I should humbly hope for Leave to pay you and him a Vifit at Nottingham; or if this be too great a Favour, till he has made further Inquiry, that he would be pleased to give himself that Trouble, and put it in my Power, as foon as possible, to convince him of the Truth of my Allegations, upon which I defire to thand or fall in my Hopes of your Favour and his. For I think, far different from many in the World, that a Deception in an Affair of this weighty Nature, should be less forgiven than in any other. Since then, dearest Madam, I build my Hopes more on the Truth of Affection for you, and the Honour of my Intentions, than any other Merit, or Pretentions, I hope you will condescend, if not to become an Advocate for me, which would be too great a Presumption to expect, yet to let your good Parents know, that you have no Aversion to the Person or Address of, dearest Madam,

36 Familiar LETTERS on the

Your for ever obliged, and affectionate humble Servant.

10

gi

tr

01

12 th

tu

W fir

guil

that

Voca

and Tha

Con

and

My best Respects attend your good Father and Mother, and whole Family.

As this puts the Matter into such a Train, as may render more Writing unnecessary; the next Steps to be taken being the Inquiry into the Truth of the young Man's Assertions, and a Confirmation of his Character; and then the Proposals on the Father's Part of what he will give with his Daughter; all which may be done best by Word of Mouth, or Interposition of Friends; so we shall have no Occasion to pursue this Instance of Courtship further.

LETTER XXII.

From a Brother to his Sister in the Country, upbraiding her for being negligent in Writing.

My dear Sifter,

I WRITE to you to acquaint you how unkindly we all take it here, that you do not write oftener to us, in relation to your Health, Diversions, and Employment in the Country. You cannot be infensible how much you are beloved by us all; judge then if you do right to omit giving us the only Satisfaction Absence affords to true Friends, which is, often to hear from one another. My Mother is highly disobliged with you, and says you are a very idle Girl; my Aunt is of the same Opinion; and I would sain, like a loving Brother, excuse you, if I could. Pray, for the suture, take care to deserve a better Character, and by writing soon, and often, put it in my Power to say what a good Sister I have: For you shall always find me

Your most affectionate Brother.

Due Respects of every one here to my Aunt, and all Friends in the Country.

LETTER XXIII.

In Answer to the preceding.

Dear Brother,

MOST kindly, and too justly, do you upbraid me. I own my Fault, and never will be guilty of the like again. I write to beg my Mother's Pardon, and that she will procure for me that of my good Aunt, on Promise of Amendment. Continue, my dear Brother, to be an Advocate for me in all my unintended Impersections, and I will never err voluntarily for the suture: That so I may be as worthy as possible of your kind Constructions, and shew myself, what I truly am, and ever will be,

Your most affectionate and obliged Sister.

LETTER XXIV.

From the Daughter to her Mother, in Excuse for her Neglett.

Honoured Madam,

I AM ashamed I staid to be reminded of my Duty by my Brother's kind Letter. I will offer no Excuse for myself, for not writing oftener, tho' I have been strangely taken up by the Kindness and Favour of your good Friends here, particularly my Aunt Windus: For well do I know, that my Duty to my honoured Mother ought to take place of all other Considerations. All I beg therefore is, that you will be so good to forgive me, on Promise of Amendment, and to procure Forgiveness also of my Aunt Talbot, and all Friends. Believe me, Madam, when I say, that no Diversions here or elsewhere shall make me forget the Duty I owe to so good a Mother, and such kind Relations; and that I shall ever be

Your gratefully dutiful Daughter.

My Aunt and Cousins desire their kind Love to you, and due Respects to all Friends. Brother fohn has great Reputation with every one for his kind Letter to me.

LETTER XXV.

From a Son-in-Law to bis Wife's Father, acquainting bim with his Wife's Illness.

Honoured Sir,

I AM forry to acquaint you with the Indisposition of your dear Daughter. She was taken ill last Monday of a Fever, and has all the Assistance that

SIME

le fa

gi

y

S

T

just take kno

Maf

of n ever becau

I sha

Whet

Offer

we can procure in these Parts. I hope she is not in Danger. However, I thought it my Duty to let you know it in time, that you may satisfy your-self, that no Care is wanting; and that you may savour us with a personal Visit; which will be a great Consolation to her, who craves, mean time, your Blessing and Prayers; and also to, Sir,

Your dutiful Son.

This may ferve, mutatis mutandis, in the like Circumstance, for a Daughter to her Husband's Father, or Mother, and in several other intimate Relations.

LETTER XXVI.

From a Country Chapman beginning Trade, to a City Dealer, offering his Correspondence.

SIR,

d

y illat

of of

e,

or

nd

er.

to er

for 27, ion

alt

hat

WE

Manchester, Oct. 20.

THE Time of my Apprenticeship, with Mr. Dabbins of this Town, being expired, I am just going to begin for myself in Chestersield, having taken a Shop there for that Purpose. And as I know the Satisfaction you always gave to my Master in your Dealings, I make an Offer to you of my Correspondence, in Expectation that you will use me as well as you have done him, in whatever I may write to you for. And this I the rather expect, as you cannot disoblige Mr. Dobbins by it, because of the Distance I shall be from him; and I shall endeavour to give you equal Content with regard to my Payments, &c. Your speedy Answer, whether or no you are disposed to accept of my Offer, will oblige

Your humble Servant.

LETTER XXVII.

In Answer to the foregoing.

SIR,

I HAVE received yours of October 20. and very chearfully accept the Favour you offer me. I will take care to ferve you in the best manner I am able, and on the same Foot with Mr. Dobbins; not doubting you will make as punctual Returns as he does; which intitles him to a more favourable Usage than could otherwise be afforded. I wish you Success with all my Heart, and am

Your obliged Servant.

all

m cre

M: Co

we

wh

ters Ou

With

Fron

H

m

TW

him i

LETTER XXVIII.

From a Maid servant in Town, acquainting her Father and Mother in the Country with a Proposal of Marriage, and asking their Consents.

Honoured Father and Mother,

I Think it my Duty to acquaint you, that I am addressed to for a Change of Condition, by one Mr. John Tanner, who is a Glazier, and lives in the Neighbourhood by us. He is a young Man of a sober Character, and has been set up about two Years, has good Business for his Time, and is well beloved and spoken of by every one. My Friends here think well of it, particularly my Master and Mistress; and he says, he doubts not, by God's Blessing on his Industry, to maintain a Family very prettily: And I have fairly told him, how little he has to expect with me. But I would not conclude on any thing, however, till I had acquainted you with his Proposals, and asked your Blessings and Consents. For I am, and ever will be,

Your dutiful Daughter.

LETTER XXIX.

From the Parents, in Answer to the preceding.

Dear Nanny,

WE have received your dutiful Letter. We can only pray to God to direct and bless you in all your Engagements. Our Distance from you must make us leave every thing to your own Discretion; and as you are so well fatisfied in Mr. Tanner's Character, as well as all Friends, and your Master and Mistress, we give our Blessings and Consents with all our Hearts: We are only forry we can do no more for you. But let us know when it is done, and we will do some little Matters, as sar as we are able, towards House keeping. Our Respects to Mr. Tanner. Every body joins with us in Wishes for your Happiness; and may God bless you, is all that can be said by Your truly loving Father and Mother.

LETTER XXX.

From the same, acquainting her Parents with her Marriage.

Honoured Father and Mother,

Write to acquaint you, that last Thursday I was married to Mr. Tanner, and am to go home to him in a Fortnight. My Master and Mistress have been

ry I am

he ble ish

ot

nt.

ber b a eir

am one s in out d is My ster

od's ery

has

42 Familiar LETTERS on the

been very kind, and have made me a Present towards Housekeeping of Three Guineas. I had saved Twenty Pounds in Service, and that is all. I told him the naked Truth of every thing, and indeed did not intend to marry so soon; but when I had your Letter, and shew'd it him, he would not let me rest till it was done. Pray don't streighten yourselves out of Love to me. He joins with me in saying so, and bids me present his Duty to you, and tell you, that he sears not to maintain me very well. I have no Reason to doubt of being very happy. And your Prayers for a Blessing on both our Industry, will, I hope, be a Means to make us more so. We are, and ever shall be, with Respects to all Friends,

Your most dutiful Son and Daughter.

LETTER XXXI.

Recommending a Superior Man-Servant.

SIR,

THE Bearer of this is Mr. John Andrews, whom I mentioned to you last time I saw you; and for whose Integrity and Ability to serve you in the way you talked of, I dare be answerable. I take the greater Pleasure in this Recommendation, as I doubt not it will be of Service to you both: And am, Sir,

Your most obedient Servant.

LET-

W

for

2 1

H

M

and ver fwe

will to i

port mer

Beare away neis,

LETTER XXXII.

Recommending a Wet-Nurse.

MADAM,

to-rad

inn I not

ten me

ou,

ery

ery

oth

us cts

er.

ws,

rve er-

mint.

T-

THE Bearer is Mrs. Newman, whom I recommended to you as a Nurse for Master. will be pleased with her neat Appearauce, and wholsome Countenance. She lives just above Want, in a pleasant airy Place; and has a very honest diligent Husband, with whom she lives very happily; and the Man is exceedingly fond of Children, very fober, and good-humour'd; and they have every thing very pretty about them. You will find fuch Answers to the Questions that shall be put to her, as will please you in every respect that you mention'd to me; and the Woman will not tell an Untruth, or impose upon you. In a word, I know not a more proper Person, and I am glad I have this Opportunity to oblige you in so deserved a Recommendation: For I am, dear Madam,

Your most faithful Servant.

LETTER XXXIII.

Recommending a Cook-maid.

MADAM,

YOU defired me to inquire for a Maid who was qualified to serve you as a Cook. The Bearer lived three Years in her last Place, and went way to her Friends in the Country, on a Fit of Illness, of which she is now perfectly recovered. As she

44 Familiar LETTERS on the

she had given no Hopes of Return, they had provided themselves when she offered her Service again. They give her a very good Character, as well for Honesty and Sobriety, as for her orderly Behaviour, and obliging Temper, as also for her good Performance of what she undertakes. I therefore thought you could not wish for a properer Person; and shall be glad it proves so. For I am, Madam,

Your most obedient Servant.

SI

th

to

ch

pe

CO

m yo Gi

1

I

late

the wha

cious it wi

to ca to g on th Frien

felf t

judge make

In

greate of al

LETTER XXXIV. Recommending a Chamber-maid.

MADAM,

THE Bearer, Jane Adams, is well recommended to me as a diligent, faithful Body, who understands her Needle well, is very neat and housewisely, and, as you desired, no Gossip or Makebate; and has had a tolerable Education, being descended from good Friends. I make no doubt of her answering this Character. Of which I will satisfy you farther, when I have the Honour to see you. Till when I remain

Your most obedient humble Servant.

LETTER XXXV.

Recommending a Nursery-maid.

MADAM,

THE Bearer, Sarah Williams, is a housewifely genteel Body, who has been used to attend Children, and has a great Tenderness for them.

She

She is very careful and watchful over them in all their little pretty Ways; and is a very proper Person to encourage their good Inclinations, or mildly to check their little Perversenesses, so far as you shall permit her to do the one or the other. She is come of good Friends, who have had Missortunes; is very honest, and will, I dare say, please you much, if you are not provided; which I hope you are not, for both your sakes; for I love the Girl, and am, with great Respect, Madam,

Your obliged humble Servant.

LETTER XXXVI.

A Father to a Son, to dissuade him from the Vice of Drinking to Excess.

My dear Son,

10-

in.

for ur,

er-

ore

n;

n,

int.

ded-ufe-akeeing

oubt

will

) fee

ant.

rifely

tend hem.

She

T is with a Grief proportioned to my Love, which is extreme, that I understand you have of late neglected your Studies, and given yourself up to the odious Vice of Drinking: What shall I say, what shall I do, to engage you to quit this pernicious Practice, before it becomes such a Habit, that it will be impossible, or at least very difficult, for you to cast it off? Let me require, let me intreat you, to give a suitable Attention to what I have to say on this Head, which I shall offer rather as a warm Friend, than an angry Father; and as I address myself to your Reason, I will leave it to yourself to judge of the Truth of the Observations I have to make to you.

In the first Place, with respect to Health, the greatest Jewel of this Life, it is the most destructive of all Vices: Asthma's, Vertigoes, Palsies, Apoplexies, plexies, Gouts, Colicks, Fevers, Dropfies, Confumptions, Stone, and Hypochondriack Difeases, are naturally introduced by exceffive Drinking.

All the rest of the Vices, together, are not so often punished with sudden Death as this one: What satal Accidents, what Quarrels, what Breaches between Friend and Friend, are owing to it!

Then, in the fecond Place; How does it deface Reason, destroy all the tender Impulses of Nature, make a wife Man a Fool, and subject Persons of the brightest Parts to the Contempt of the weakest, and even, in time, extinguish those thining Qualities, which constitute the Difference between a Man of Sense and a Blockhead! For, as a certain very eminent Author well observes, Fools having generally stronger Nerves, and less volatile Spirits, than Men of fine Understandings, that which will rouse the one, will make the other either stupid or frantick; and tho' it sometimes, while the Fit continues, strengthens the Imagination, yet it always depresses the Judgment; and after the Fit is over, both those Faculties languish together, till, in time, it quenches the Imagination, impairs the Memory, and drowns the Judgment.

Most other Vices are compatible, as the same Author observes, with several Virtues; but Drunkenness runs counter to all the Duties of Life. A great Drinker can hardly be either a good Husband, a good Father, a good Son, a good Brother, or a good Friend: It lays him open to the worst Company, and this Company frequently subjects him to lewd Women, Gaming, Quarrels, Riots, and often Murders. All other Vices, even the greatest of Vices, as Ambition, Unchastity, Bigotry, Avarice, Hypocrify, detest this unnatural and worse than beastly Vice; for the Beasts themselves,

even

n

10 fr

fo

A

th

by

the

En

IA

I

Pof

hop

M

BY is

Unde

the Pa

tion o

ncapa

and fro

t what and ev

celing

even the uncleanest of them, know nothing of it, much less practise it.

fo

e:

at ng

le-

of ect

of

ofe

nce

or,

ves,

less

ngs, ther

mes,

and

tion, ent.

fame run-

A

band,

or a

Com-

s him

, and reatest

gotry,

worle

felves,

even

Other Vices indeed make Men worse, says this judicious Author; but this alters Men from them-selves, to that degree, that they differ not more from their present Companions, than from their former Selves. A Habitude of it will make the Prudent inconsiderate, the Ambitious indolent, the Active idle, and the Industrious slothful; so that their Affairs are ruin'd for want of Application, or by being intrusted in the Hands of those who turn them wholly to their own Advantage, and, in the End, to the Ruin of those who employ them.

I have written a long Letter already: Yet have I still more to say, which, that I may not tire you, I will leave to another Letter; which the next Post shall bring you. And I am, mean time, in hopes this will not lose its proper Effect,

Your most indulgent Father.

LETTER XXXVII.

The same Subject pursued.

My dear Son,

BY my former you will see, that hard Drinking is a Vice, that breaks a Man's Rest, impairs the Understanding, extinguishes the Memory, inflames the Passions, debauches the Will, lays the Foundation of the worst and most dangerous Distempers, incapacitates a Person from pursuing his Studies, and from applying to the Duties of his Calling, be taken it will; begets Contempt from the World; and even if a Man's Circumstances were above teling the Expence, which can hardly be, alters and

And do you judge, my Son, how a Man can answer this Conduct to God, to his Parents and other Relations, to his Wife, to his Children, to himself, and persist in a barbarous and an unnatural Vice, which makes himself not only miserable and contemptible, but transmits the Mischief to his unhappy and innocent Children, if he has any.

Add to all this, That it is a Vice a Man cannot eafily mafter and fubdue; or which, like fome others, may be cured by Age; but it is a Vice that feeds and nourishes itself by Practice, and grows upon a Man as he lives longer in the World, till at last, if it cuts him not off in the Flower of his Days, his Body expects and requires Liquor: And fo, tho' a Man, when he enters upon it, may be fingle, yet if he ever should marry, it may be attended with all the frightful and deplorable Confequences I have mentioned, and ruin besides an innocent and perhaps prudent Woman, rendering her, without her own Fault, the joint unhappy Cause of adding to the Number of the miferable and profligate Children, with which the World too much abounds, and which is owing to nothing fo much as this detestable Sin in the Parents.

R

y

of

Fr

my

not this

Consider all these things, my dear Son; and, before it be too late, get the better of a Vice that you will find difficult to fubdue, when it is grown to a Head, and which will otherwise creep upon you every Day more and more, till it shuts up your Life in Misery as to yourself, and Contempt as to the World; and, instead of giving Cause even to your nearest and best Friends to remember you with Pleasure, will make it a Kindness in them to forget they ever had in the World, if a Parent, such a Son; if a Tutor, such a Pupil; if a Brother or Sifter, fuch an unhappy near Relation; if a Wife, fuch an Husband; if a Child, fuch a Father; and if a Friend, such a wretched one, that cannot be thought of without Pity and Regret, for having shortened his Days, and ruined his Affairs, by so pernicious a Habit.

What a Joy, on the contrary, will that noblest of Conquests, over your self, yield to all those dear Relations! And, in particular, what Pleasure will you give to the aged Heart, and declining Days, of, my dear Child,

Your indulgent and most affectionate Father!

LETTER XXXVIII.

From an Apprentice to his Master, begging Forgiveness for a great Misdemeanor.

Good Sir,

I AM so asham'd of myself for the last Occasion. I have given you to be angry with me, after my repeated Promises of Amendment, that I have not the Courage to speak to you. I therefore take this Method of begging you to forgive what is his Soife, the ers,

nd

to nd, ds; d a me,

can and to

and his

nnot fome that grows

till at of his And hay be be atconfean in-

Cause ad pro-

much much

Con-

past; and let this Letter testify against me, if ever I wilfully or knowingly offend again for the future. You have Children of your own. They may poffibly offend; tho' I hope they never will as I have Yet, Sir, would you not wish they might meet with Pardon, if they should, rather than Reprobation? ---- My Making or my Ruin, I am fenfible, lies in your Breaft. If you will not forgive me, fad will be the Consequence to me, I doubt. If you do, you may fave a Soul, as well as a Body, from Mifery; and I hope, Sir, you will weigh this with your usual Goodness and Consideration. What is past, I cannot help; but for what is to come, I do promise, if God gives me Health and Power, that my Actions shall testify for me how much I am, good Sir,

Your repentant and obliged Servant.

LETTER XXXIX.

The Master's Answer.

TOHN, YOUR Letter has affected me so much, that I am willing once more to pass over all you have done. Surely I may at last depend on these your folemn Affurances, and, as I hope, deep Contrition! If not, be it as you fay, and let your Letter testify against you for your ingrateful Baseness; and for me, in my Readiness (which however shall be the last time) to forgive one that has been fo much used to promise, and so little to perform. But I hope for better, because I yet wish you well; being, as you use me,

Yours, or otherwise.

hap

Di

fuc

and

and

hay

in my kno muc

obse impo hone

My and i

the all, li

but !

please

may

I shou

Miftr

as har

dear 1

make me my

LETTER XL.

From an Apprentice to bis Friends, in Praise of bis Master and Family.

Honoured Sir,

11

1 ty

e, aft

to

for ou

F-

I Know it will be a great Satisfaction to you and my dear Mother, to hear that I go on very happily in my Bufiness; and my Master, seeing my Diligence, puts me forward, and encourages me in fuch a manner, that I have great Delight in it, and hope I shall answer in time your good Wishes and Expectations, and the Indulgence which you have always shewn me. There is such good Order in the Family, as well on my Mistress's Part as my Master's, that every Servant, as well as I, knows his Duty, and does it with Pleasure. So much Evenness, Sedateness, and Regularity, is observed in all they injoin or expect, that it is impossible but it should be so. My Master is an honest worthy Man; every body speaks well of him. My Mistress is a chearful sweet-temper'd Woman, and rather heals Breaches than widens them. And the Children, after such Examples, behave to us all, like one's own Brothers and Sifters. Who can but love such a Family? I wish, when it shall please God to put me in such a Station, that I may carry myself just as my Master does; and if I should ever marry, have just such a Wife as my Miffres: And then, by God's Bleffing, I shall be as happy as they are; and as you, Sir, and my dear Mother, have always been. If any thing can make me still happier than I am, or continue to me my present Felicity, it will be the Continuance

Your ever dutiful Son.

LETTER XLI.

Another from an Apprentice, where the Master is too remis in his own Affairs.

Honoured Sir and Madam,

Y OU defire to know how I go on in my Bufiness. I must needs fay, Very well in the main; for my Master leaves every thing, in a manner, to me. I wish he did not, for his own fake. For tho' I hope he will never fuffer on the Account of any wilful Remissiness or Negligence, much less want of Fidelity, in me, yet his Affairs do not go on fo well as if he was more in them, and less at the Tavern. But it becomes not me to reflect upon my Master, especially as what I may write or fay on this Head, will rather expose his Failings, than do him Service; for as they must be his Equals that should reprove him, so all a Servant can observe to others will do more Harm than Good to him. One Thing is at present in my own Power; and that is, to double my Diligence, that his Family suffer as little as possible by his Remissness: And another, I hope, by God's Grace, will be; and that is, to avoid in myfelf, when my Time comes, those Failings which I fee so blameable in him. And as this will be benefiting properly by the Example (for that Bee must be worse than a Drone, that cannot draw Honey from a bitter as well as a sweet Flower), so it will give you the Pleasure of knowing, that

VOL Accoun

WO we

Way Sir,

can, will

who w you th only for tion for you th

your good Instructions are not thrown away upon me; and that I am, and ever will be,

Your dutiful Son.

LETTER XLII.

To a Country Correspondent, modestly requesting a Balance of Accounts between them.

SIR,

I find myself constrained, by a present Exigence, to beg you to balance the Account between us. Tho' Matters have run into some Length, yet would I not have apply'd to you, had I known so well how to answer my pressing Occasions any other way. If it suits you not to pay the Whole, I beg, Sir, you will remit me as much towards it as you can, without Prejudice to your own Affairs; and it will extremely oblige

Your most humble Servant.

LETTER XLIII.

In Answer to the preceding.

SIR.

1

le!

a m in li-ole d's

ich

be

Bee

raw er),

that

your

I AM very glad I have it in my Power to fend you now, directly, One hundred Pounds, on Account between us, which I do by our Carrier, who will pay you in Specie. I will foon remit you the Balance of your whole Demand, and am only forry, that I gave Occasion for this Application for what is so justly your Due. When I fend you the rest, which will be in a few Days, if I D 3

54 Familiar LETTERS on the

am not greatly disappointed, I will accompany it with an Order, which will begin a new Debt; but which I hope to be more punctual in discharging, than I have been in the last. I am, very sincerely,

Your Friend and Servant.

LETTER XLIV.

A more pressing and angry Letter from a City Dealer on the same Account.

Mr. Barret,

I AM forry your ill Usage constrains me to write to you in the most pressing manner. Can you think it is possible to carry on Business after the manner you act by me? You know what Promifes you have made me, and how from time to time you have broken them. And can I depend upon any new ones you make? If you use others as you do me, how can you think of carrying on Bufiness? If you do not, what must I think of a Man who deals worse with me, than he does with any body else?----If you think you may trespass more upon me, than you can on others, this is a very bad Compliment to my Prudence, or your own Gratitude. For furely good Usage should be intitled to good Usage. I know how to allow for Disappointments as well as any Man; but can a Man be disappointed for ever? Trade is so dependent a thing, you know, that it cannot be carried on without mutual Punctuality. Does not the Merchant expect it from me, for those very Goods I send you? And can I make a Return to him, without receiving it from you? What End can it answer to give you Two Years Credit, and then be at an Uncertainty, for Goods which I sell at a small Profit, and have an fin R be th

I a stulk 50% dit; for t

main fome to you seipt you for but strain Return beg you Service that y not Six Months Credit for myself? Indeed, Sir, this will never do. I must be more punctually used by you, or else must deal as little punctually with others; and what then must be the Consequence? ----- Inshort, Sir, I expect a handsome Payment by the next Return, and Security for the Remainder; and shall be very loth to take any harsh Methods to procure this Justice to myself, my Family, and my own Creditors. For I am, if it be not your own Fault,

Your faithful Friend and Servant.

LETTER XLV.

In Answer to the preceding.

SIR,

d ts ed

u

u-

a nd

it

ou

ty,

ve

MUST acknowlege I have not used you well, and can give no better Answer to your just Expostulations, than to send you the inclosed Draught for 301. which you will be pleased to carry to my Credit; and to assure you of more punctual Treatment for the future. Your Letter is no bad Lesson to me; I have con'd it often, and hope I shall improve by it. I am ready to give you my Bond for the Remainder, which I will keep paying every Month fomething till 'tis all discharged; and what I write to you for, in the Interim, shall be paid for on Receipt of the Goods. This, I hope, Sir, will fatisfy you for the present. If I could do better, I would; but shall be streighten'd to do this: But I think, in Return for your Patience, I cannot do less, to convince you, that I am now, at last, in Earnest. beg you'll continue to me the same good Usage and Service I have met with from you hitherto; and that you'll believe me to be, unfeignedly,

Your obliged humble Servant.

LETTER XLVI.

To a young Trader generally in a Hurry in Business, advising Method as well as Diligence.

Dear Nephew,

THE Affection I have always borne you, as well for your own fake, as for your late Father's and Mother's, makes me give you the Trouble of these Lines, which I hope you will receive as lo

So

ho

his

he

any

in t

und

to

WOL

but

Exa

have

and reft

Ward

tigue

thot

Difap

exped

A

kindly as I intend them.

I have lately call'd upon you several times, and have as often found you in an extraordinary Hurry; which I well know cannot be sometimes avoided; but, methinks, need not be always the Case, if your Time were disposed in regular and proper Proportions to your Business. I have frequently had Reason to believe, that more than half the Flutter which appears among Traders in general, is rather the Effect of their Indolence, than their Industry, however willing they are to have it thought otherwise; and I will give you one Instance in Confirmation of this Opinion, in a Neighbour of mine.

This Gentleman carried on for some Years a profitable Business; but, indulging himself every Evening in a Tavern Society or Club, which the Promotion of Business (as is usually the Case) gave the first Pretence for, he look'd upon those Engagements as the natural Consequence of the Approach of Night; and drove on his Business in the Day with Precipitation, that he might get thither with the earliest. He seldom kept very late Hours, tho' he never came home soon. The Night being gone, and his Bottle empty'd, the Morning was always wanted to dispel the Fumes of the Wine.

not:

Whoever therefore came to him before Nine, was defired to call again; and when he rose, so many Matters waited for him, as directly threw him into a Flutter; fo that from his Rifing till Dinnertime, he feem'd in one continued Ferment. long Dinner-time he always allowed himself, in order to recover the Fatigues he had undergone; and all his Table-talk was, How heavy his Bufiness lay upon him! And what Pains he took in it! The hearty Meal, and the Time he indulged himself at Table, begot an Inappetency for any more Business for that short Afternoon; so all that could be defer'd, was put off to the next Morning; and long'd-for Evening approaching, he flies to his usual Solace: Empties his Bottle by Eleven: Comes home: Gets to Bed; and is invisible till next. Morning at Nine; and then rifing, enters upon his usual Hurry and Confusion.

Thus did his Life feem, to those who saw him in his Business, one constant Scene of Fatigue, tho' he scarce ever apply'd to it Four regular Hours in any one Day: Whereas had he risen only at Seven in the Morning, he would have got all his Business under by Noon; and those Two Hours, from Seven to Nine, being before many People go abroad, he would have met with no Interruption in his Affairs; but might have improved his Servants by his own Example, directed them in the Business of the Day, have inspected his Books, written to his Dealers, and put every thing in so regular a Train, for the rest of the Day, that whatever had occurred afterwards, would rather have served to divert than fatigue him.

d

)-

d er

er

y,

r-

ra

ry

he

ve

np-

he

ner

rs,

ng

vas

ne.

0-

And what, to cut my Story short, was the Upshot of the Matter? Why, meeting with some Disappointments and Losses (as all Traders must expect, and ought to provide for), and his Customers: not feeing him in his Shop so much as they expected, and when there, always in a disobliging petulant Hurry; and moreover, Mistakes frequently happening through the Flurry into which he put himself and every one about him; by these means his Business dwindled away insensibly; and, not being able to go out of his usual Course, which helped to impair both his Capacity and Ardor to Business, his Creditors began to look about them, and he was compelled to enter into the State of his Affairs; and then had the Mortification to find the Balance of 2000 l. against him.

This was a shocking Case to himself; but more to his Family; for his Wife had lived, and his Children had been educated, in such a manner, as induced them to hope their Fortunes would be sufficient to place them in a State of Independence.

In short, being obliged to quit a Business he had managed with so little Prudence, his Friends got him upon a charitable Foundation, which afforded him bare Subsistence for himself; his Children were dispersed some one way, and some another, into low Scenes of Life; and his Wife went home to her Friends, to be snub'd and reslected on by her own in for lov

me

ftre

Reg

the

you

gain Yel

pen

Family, for Faults not her own.

This Example will afford several good Hints to a young Tradesman, which are too obvious to need expatiating upon. And as I dare say, your Prudence will keep you from the like Fault, you will never have Reason to reproach yourself on this score. But yet, as I always sound you in a Hurry, when I called upon you, I could not but give you this Hint, for sear you should not rightly proportion your Time to your Business, and lest you should suspend to the next Hour, what you could and ought to do in the present, and so did not keep your Business properly under. Method is every every thing in Business, next to Diligence. And you will, by falling into a regular one, always be calm and unrussed, and have time to bestow in your Shop with your Customers; the Female ones especially; who always love to make a great many Words in their Bargainings, and expect to be humour'd and persuaded: And how can any Mansind Time for this, if he prefers the Tavern to his Shop, and his Bed to his Business? I know you will take in good Part what I have written, because you are sensible how much I am

Your truly affectionate, &c.

LETTER XLVII.

From a Son reduced by his own Extravagance; requesting his Father's Advice, on his Intention to turn Player.

Honoured Sir,

13

d

t

re

W

er

m

to ed

u-ill

y, ou

1-ou

ot

15

ry

A F T E R the many Occasions I have given for your Displeasure, permit me to ask your Advice in an Affair which may render my whole Life comfortable or miserable. You know, Sir, to what a low Ebb my Folly and Extravagance have reduced me: Your generous Indulgence has made you stretch your Power, to my Shame I speak it, even beyond the Bounds which Wisdom, and a necessary Regard to the rest of your Family, would permit stherefore I cannot hope for surther Assistance from you. Something, however, I must resolve upon to gain a Maintenance: And an Accident sell out Yesterday, which offers me, at least, present Bread.

Mr. Rich, Master of one of the Theatres, happened to dine at my Uncle's when I was there: After Dinner, the Subject of Discourse was, the

D 6

Art

Art of a Comedian: On which my Uncle took Occasion to mention the little Flights in that way with which I have diverted myfelf in my gayer Moments; and partly compelled me to give an Instance of my Abilities. Mr. Rich was pleased to declare his Approbation of my Manner and Voice: and, on being told my Circumstances, offer'd at once to take me into his Company with an Allowance fufficient for present Subsistence, and additional Encouragement, as I should be found to deserve it. Half a Benefit he promifed me the first Season; which, by my (otherwise too) numerous Acquaintance, might, I believe, be turned to pretty good Account. I am not fond of this Life; but see no other Means of supporting myself like a Gentleman. Your speedy Answer will be ever gratefully acknowleged by, honoured Sir,

Your dutiful, the' unhappy Son.

I

th

ca

ot.

of

Co yo an

To

But.

mati

wha

give

by y

LETTER XLVIII.

The Father's Answer, setting forth the Inconveniencies and Disgrace attending the Profession of a Player.

Dear Gilbert,

I Should be glad to have you in any Situation which would afford you a comfortable and reputable Subfishence: But cannot think the Life of a Stage-player proper for that End. You must consider, that tho' in the gay Trappings of that Employment a Man may represent a Gentleman, yet none can be farther from that Character, if a perpetual Dependence be the worst Kind of Servility. In the first Place, the Company you will be in a manner oblig'd to keep, will be such as will tend little to the Improvement of your Mind, or Amend-

Amendment of your Morals: To the Master of the Company you lift in, you must be obsequious to a Degree of Slavery. Not one of an Audience that is able to hifs, but you must fear; and each single Man you come to know personally, you must oblige on every Occasion that offers, to engage their Interest at your Benefit. A Thought the most shocking to a free and generous Mind! And if to this you add the little Profit that will attend making a low Figure on the Stage, and, besides the Qualifications necessary, the incredible Fatigue attending the Support of a good Figure upon it; you will easily see, that more Credit, more Satisfaction, more Ease, and more Profit, may be got in many other Stations, without the mortifying Knowlege of being deem'd a Vagrant by the Laws of your Country. I hope this will be enough to diffuade you from farther Thoughts of the Stage: And, in any other Employment, you may yet expect fome fmall Affiftance from

Your loving Father.

LETTER XLIX.

To a Brother too captious to bear himself the Ridicule be practises upon others.

Dear Jack,

AC

nd ife

uft.

at n, a

er-/ill

Hiv

10 id-

AM glad to find you improve both in Thought and Speech. You know I am no Witch at either: But, so as we have some Wit in our Family, no matter who is at the Trouble of carrying it for what he'll get by it. I suppose you thought to give no small Pleasure to the Company last Night by your facetious Flings at all around you, not excepting excepting the Parson himself: But should you not have confidered, that every one in the Room had a Right to return the Freedom you took, in the best manner he was able? Was it therefore well in you to refent so warmly as you did, a smart Remark made by Mr. Crifpe, on a palpable Blunder of your own, when you had taken so much Liberty with him, as well as every body elfe, just before? Indeed, Brother, you must either lay aside Ridicule. or learn to bear it better; and in the prefent Cafe you fhould have remember'd, that, in the manner you began with that Gentleman, it was not possible for him to fay any thing it would have been your Credit to refent. A Retort on these Occafions must be excused, tho' fraught with Resentment; for a Man is not always in a Humour to be jested with, and it is the Duty of him who begins, to take what follows. Your failing in this known Rule, whatever you may think, has made you appear in fo mean a Light to the whole Company, that all your Acuteness will not in haste atone for it.

If I judge rightly, nothing is more delicate than Ridicule: Where it is conducted with Prudence and Humour, it is fure to please even the Man who is the Subject of it, if he is not of a morose Temper: But when, instead of that, personal Failings, or private Indifcretions, are exposed for the Entertainment of a Company, tho' you may think to raife a Laugh by it in the Unreflecting, it will bring upon you the Censure of the Considerate. It is our Duty to confult what we can bear ourselves, as well as what we can inflict on others. For my own Part, I know I cannot bear what is called a close Rub, as many Men can; and for that Reason I never jest with any body, unless by way of Reprisal; and that I shorten all I can, lest my Temper should not hold No out.

ble

Wi

Lif

He

 G_0

all

Pra

nefs

No doubt but you have more Humour than I; but if you do not blend in it a Quantity of Temper fufficient to carry it off, you will be no Gainer by the Qualification. The Philosopher says, That to Bear and Forbear, are the highest Points of Wisdom: If so, where is his Wisdom, who will neither do the one or the other? You may not like the Freedom I have here taken; but I respect you too well to pass over your Foibles without some Observation; being

Your truly affectionate Brother ..

LETTER L.

To a Friend, on his Recovery from a dangerous Illness.

Dear Sir,

t

d

e

n

er

?

e, er lien

a-

be vn.

ap-

for:

nan

and

o is

er:

pri-

in-ife a pon

ll as rt, l

, as jest

that hold

No

GIVE me Leave to mingle my Joy with that of all your Friends and Relations, in the Recovery of your Health, and to join with them to bless God for continuing to your numerous Well-wishers the Benefit of your useful and valuable Life. May God Almighty long preserve you in Health, and prosper all your Undertakings, for the Good of your worthy Family, and the Pleasure of all your Friends and Acquaintance, is the hearty Prayer of, Sir,

Your faithful Friend, and humble Servant.

LETTER LI.

On the same Occasion.

Good Sir,

I HAVE received, with great Delight, the good News of your Recovery from the dangerous Illness with which it pleased God to afflict you. I most

64 Familiar LETTERS on the most heartily congratulate you and your good Lady and Family upon it; and make it my Prayer, That your late Indisposition may be succeeded by such a Renewal of Health and Strength both of Body and Mind, as may make your Life equally happy to yourself, as it must be to all who have the Pleasure to know you. I could not avoid giving you this Trouble, to testify the Joy that affected my Heart on the Occasion; and to assure you that I am, with the greatest Affection and Respect, Sir,

Your faithful humble Servant,

LETTER LII.

In Answer to the preceding.

Dear Sir,

I GIVE you many Thanks for your kind Congratulations. My Return of Health will be the greater Pleasure to me, if I can contribute in any measure to the Happiness of my many good Friends; and, particularly, to that of you and yours; for I assure you, Sir, that nobody can be more than I am, Your obliged humble Servant.

LETTER LIII.

To a young Lady, advising ber not to change ber Guardians, nor to encourage any clandestine Address.

Dear Miss,

THE Friendship which long subsisted between your prudent Mother and me, has always made me attend to your Welfare with more than a common mon

mad you Roo judg than and Year Wor

be ft

you,

was r who i to diff

n

G

te

yo tai

an

Co

Ye

don

more in nefs a in any putation your think when, themse try'd I repent mon Concern: And I could not conceal my Surprize at hearing, that you intend to remove the Guardianship of yourself and Fortune, from the Gentlemen to whom your tender Parents committed the Direction of both. I am asraid, my Dear, your Dissatisfaction arises more from sudden Distaste, than from mature Reslection. Mr. Jones and Mr. Pitt were long the intimate Friends and Companions of your Father; for more than Thirty Years he had experienc'd their Candor and Wisdom; and it was their Fitness for the Trust, that induced him to leave you to their Care; and will you reflect upon his Judgment?

1

ıd

r-

to

u-

he

he

nt,

on-

the

any ds;

or I

m,

ant.

ange

lan-ween nade

mon

They are not less wise now, than when he made his Will; and if they happen to differ from your Judgment in any thing of Moment, what Room have you to suppose yourself better able to judge of the Consequences of what you defire, than they? I do not undervalue your good Sense, and yet I must tell you, that (the Difference of Years consider'd, and their Knowlege of the World, which you can yet know little of) it would be strange if they did not understand better than you, what was proper for you; and their Honesty was never yet disputed. Upon these Considerations, who is most probably to blame, should you happen to disagree? From such Men, you will never meet more Restraints than are necessary for your Happiness and Interest; for nothing that can injure you in any respect, can add to their Advantage or Reputation. I have known several young Ladies of your Age impatient of the least Controul, and think hardly of every little Contradiction; but when, by any unadvised Step, they have released themselves, as they call it, from the Care of their ry'd Friends, how often have they had Cause to lepent their Rashness! How seldom do you hear what some reckon the greatest Restraints while young, repent the Effects of them when grown up!

To mention the fingle Article, about which, generally, these Differences arise, that of Marriage: What good Fruits can a Lady hope, from the insideous Progress of a clandestine Address? A Man who can be worth a Lady's Acceptance, will never be ashamed or asraid to appear openly. If he deserves to succeed, or is conscious that he does, what need of concealing his Designs from her Friends? Must it not be with a View to get her in his Power, and, by securing a Place in her Affections, make her Weakness give Strength to bis Presumption, and forward those Pretensions that he knew would otherwise be rejected with Scorn?

Let me tell you, my dear Miss, that you neither want Sense nor Beauty; and no young Gentleman can be afhamed of being known to love you. Confider this well, and despise the Man who seeks the Aid of back Doors, bribed Servants, and Gardenwalls, to get Access to your Person. If he had not a meaner Opinion of your Understanding than he ought, he would not hope for Success from such poor Methods. Let him fee then, how much he is mistaken, if he thinks you the giddy Girl his clandestine Conduct seems to call you. In time.advise with your try'd Friends. Trust no Servant with Secrets you would not have known to your Equals or Guardians; and be fure ever to shun a servile Confidant, who generally makes her Market of her Mistress, and fells her to the highest Bidder.

I hope, dear Miss, you will seriously restect upon all I have said, and excuse the well-meant Zeal of Your fincere Friend.

Fi

be

you Fan

Tou

Con Ten

nate

abou

For (

did,

him.

that are c

your fe follow

try to ments

o him

ended

im, t

n obli

ind tha

OU W

not i ace:

nd will nake h

LETTER LIV.

From a Mother to her Daughter, jealous of her Hust and.

Dear Bet,

9

e-

e:

ho-

be

ves.

eed

uft

nd,

her

and uld.

her

nan.

on-

the len-

not n he fuch

he is lan-

dvife

with quals

rvile

f her upon

l of

iend.

I AM forry to find you are grown jealous of your Husband. 'Tis a most uneasy Passion, and will be fatal, not only to your present Quiet, but to your future Happiness, and probably to that of your Family, if you indulge it.

You either have, or have not, Cause for it. If you have Cause, look into yourself, and your own Conduct, to fee if you have not by any Change of Temper, or Disagreeableness of Behaviour, alienated your Husband's Affections; and if so, set about amending both, in order to recover them: For once he loved ou, and you were fatisfy'd he did, above all your Sex, or you would not have had him. If it be owing to his inconstant Temper, that is indeed unhappy; but then, so long as you are clear of Blame, you have nothing to reproach ourself with: And as the Creatures wicked Men. ollow, omit nothing to oblige them, you must ry to avoid fuch uneasy and disturbing Resentments, as will make you more and more distasteful o him. Shew him, that no guilty Wretch's preinded Love can be equal to your real one: Shew im, that such Creatures shall not outdo you in. n obliging Behaviour, and Sweetness of Temper; nd that, let him fly off from his Duty, if he will, ou will persevere in yours. This Conduct will, not immediately, in time, flash Conviction in his ace: He will fee what a Goodness he injures, nd will be softened by your Softness. But if you take his Home uneasy to him, he will sly both.

that and you: And to whom will he fly, but, thost probably, to one who will allow his Pleas, and aggravate every thing against you; who will fide with him, inflame his Passions, and thereby secure him to herfelf? And would you contribute to fuch a Wretch's Power over him, and furnish Opportunities for her to triumph over you? For while you exasperate his Passions, and harden his Mind against you, she will, by wicked Blandishments, shew him how obliging she can be; and so a Course of Life, that he would follow privately, and by stealth, as it were, he will more openly pursue; he will grow shameless in it; and, so common is the Vice, more's the Pity! will find those who will extenuate it for their own fakes, and throw the Blame on the Violence of your Temper, and fay, you drive him into thefe Excesses. Thus much I write, supposing you have Reason to be jealous. I will write yet another Letter on this important Subject. I hope they will have the Weight intended them, by

Your ever indulgent Mother.

LETTER

The same Subject continued.

Dear Bet,

WHAT I wrote in my former, was on a Supposition that you had too much Reason to be uneafy at your Hufband's Conduct.

I will now pursue the Subject, and put the Case that you have no Proof that he is guilty, but you Surmizes, or, perhaps, the bufy Whifperings of offcious Make-debates. In this Case, take care, m Betfey, that you don't, by the Violence of your Pal Lions

fio. tha fee rea YOU ma 7107

you

dese

I

vou those with is no Hull feren Dear

haps, my Bpand, faithfu Proge Estate

not i

Land & makes Hulba Childre

tren.

qual i he W er. The ccurre with a uired. fions, precipitate him on the Course you dread, and that you alienate not, by unjust Suspicions, his Affections from you; for then perhaps he will be ready indeed to place them somewhere else, whence you may not so easily draw him off; for he will, may be, think, as to you (if he be devoid of superior Considerations), that he may as well deserve your Suspicions, as be tiezed with them without deferving them.

flo

19-ide

ure

uch

-10c

you

inft

him

ife,

asit

WOT

ore's

t for

Vio-

into

you

other will

other.

a Sup

n to be

ne Cafe

of offi-

re, my

fions

I know it is a most shocking thing to a sober. young Woman, to think herfelf obliged to share those Affections which ought to be all her own, with a vile Prostitute, besides the Danger, which is not small, of being intirely circumvented in her Husband's Love, and perhaps have only his Indifference, if not Contempt, instead of it. But, my Dear, at the worst, comfort yourself that you are not the guilty Person; for one Day he will, perhaps, fatally find his Error. And confider, befides, my Betsey, that your Case, from an unfaithful Husand, is not near fo bad as his would be from an unaithful Wife: For, Child, he cannot make the Progeny of a Bastard Race succeed to his and your Estate or Chattels, in Injury of your lawful Chiltren. If any fuch he should have, the Law of the and brands them: Whereas a naughty Wife often. nakes the Children of another Man Heirs of her Husband's Estate and Fortune, in Injury of his own bildren or Family. So, tho' the Crime may be qual in other respects, yet this makes the Injury of he Woman to the Man, greater than his can be to er.

These Thoughts I have thrown together, as they coursed, in two Letters, that I might not tire you with a Length, that, yet, the important Subject reuited. Let me briefly sum up the Contents.

If he be guilty, try by Softness and kind Expostulations to reclaim him, before the Vice be rooted in him. If it be fo rooted, as that he cannot be drawn off, you know not what God may do for you, if you trust in Him, and take not upon your. felf, by giving up your Mind to Violence, to be your own Avenger. A fick Bed, a tender Conduct in you, a fore Difaster (and who that lives is not liable to fuch?) may give him to fee the Error of his Ways, and shew him the Foulness of his Crime; which your good Usage will aggranate, upon his fober Reflection, with the no weak Addition of Ingratitude to fo good a Wife. The Wretch he has chosen for a Partner in his Guilt, may, by her fordid Ways, awake him; by her libidinous Deportment, satiate him; by her detected Commerce with others (for fuch Creatures, having once given themselves up to Vice, know no Bounds), make him abhor her: And then he will fee the Difference between fuch a one, and a chafte Wife, whose Interests are bound up in his own, and will admire you more than ever he did; and you'll have the Pleafure, befides, in all Probability, of faving a Soul that stands in so near a Relation to your own.

But if your Uneafiness be owing to private Talebearers, and bufy Intermeddlers; take care, my Dear, you are not made a Property of by fuch mischievous Take care that you make not your own present Peace, and your future Good, and that of your Family, and of him your injur'd Husband, the Sacrifices to fuch pernicious Buly-bodies.

Consider, my Dear, all I have said, and God bless you with a Conduct and Discretion suitable to the Occasion before you, and, at the worst, give you Comfort and Patience in your own Innocence. For such is this transitory Life, that all the Ill or Good we receive, will be foon over with us; and then

tl

0

is

I

Lett

Pron

pend

that :

you,

bave

what has no

him.

10W-2

appy

Grace.

f you

hink,

Is A&

y Co

ny Sor

time.

nd, m

at you

Con

then the Punishment of the former, and the Reward of the latter, will make all Scores even, and what is past appear as nothing. Mean time I can but pray for you: As, my dear Child, becomes

Your ever affectionate Mother.

LETTER LVI:

From a tender Father to an ungracious Son.

Son John,

b

be

or be uct not

of ne; his

of has her

De-

erce

iven

nake

ffer-

hole mire

e the Soul

Tale-

Dear,

evous

own

hat of band,

1 God

uitable

t, give cence.

e Ill or

s; and then

I AM under no small Concern, that your continued ill Courses give me Occasion to write this Letter to you. I was in hopes, that your solemn Promises of Amendment might have been better depended on; but I see, to my great Mortification, that all I have done for you, and all I have said to you, is thrown away. What can I say more than I have said? Yet, once more am I desirous to try what the Force of a Letter will do with one who has not suffer'd mere Words to have any Effect upon him. Perhaps this remaining with you, if you will now-and-then seriously peruse it, may, in some happy Moment, give you Restection, and, by God's Grace, bring on your Repentance and Amendment.

Consider then, I beseech you, in time, the Evil of your Ways. Make my Case your own; and hink, if you were to be Father of such a Son, how is Actions would grieve and afflict you. But if you comfort has no Weight with you, consider, my Son, how your present Courses must impair, a time, a good Constitution, destroy your Health, and, most probably, shorten your Life. Consider that your Reputation is wounded, I hope, not mortally.

rally, as yet: That you will be ranked among the Profligates and Outcasts of the World; that no virtuous Man will keep you Company; that every one who has a Regard for his own Credit will shun you; and that you will be given up to the Society of the worst and most abandon'd of Men, when you might be improv'd by the Examples of the best: That no Family which values their own Honour, and the Welfare of their Child, will suffer your Addresses to a Daughter worthy of being sought after for a Wise, should you incline to marry; and that the worst of that Sex must probably, in that Case, fall to your Lot; which will make you miferable in this World, when you might be happy.

Then, as to another World beyond this transitory one, my Heart trembles for what most probably will be the Confequence to your poor Soul: For the human Mind is feldom at a stay: If you do not grow better, you will most undoubtedly grow worse, and you may run into those Sins and Evils, that you now perhaps think yourfelf incapable of; as already you are arrived at a Height of Folly and Wickedness, that once you would have thought you could not have been guilty of. Don't, my dear Son, let your poor Mother and me have the Mortification to think, that we have been the unhappy Means of giving Life to a Child of Perdition instead of a Child of Glory; that our beloved Son with all the Pains we have taken to instil good Principles into his Mind, in hopes he would on Day prove a Credit and Comfort to his Family should, instead of answering our longing Wishes when at Age, take fuch contrary Courfes, as will make us join to wish he had never been born.

of you but your own Good. We lived before you were born. You have been a great Expence to to liv ho the Ch our is a to h fup to y Shev Nat ture we 1 you, boaft more enabl fhall to be I I have to the second of the second o

them

My de

to bring you up to these Years. You cannot now live without us, but we can without you. hope God will continue your Life to be still a further Expence to us. For all we live for, is our Childrens Good. Let then the Disinterestedness of our Plea move you. Be but good to your felf, that is all we require of you. Let us but have Reason to hope, that when we are dead and gone, you will support our Name with Credit, and be no Burden. to your poor Sifters, nor Difgrace to our Memories. Shew us that you are of a generous, not of a fordid Nature; and will probably fet yourfelf above future Misfortunes by reclaiming in time; and then we shall be happy. As God has done his Part by you, and given you Talents that every one cannot boast, let me beg you to consider only, how much more noble it is to be in fuch a Situation as shall enable you to confer Benefits, than fuch an one as shall lay you under the poor Necessity to receive them from others, and, perhaps, where they ought to be least expected.

I have written a long Letter. The Subject is next my Heart, and will excuse it. God give a Blessing to it! God give you to see the Error of your Ways before it be too late, and before you get such a Habit as you cannot alter if you would! Let your poor Mother and Sisters look upon you with Pleasure, rather than Apprehension, in case God Almighty should take me away from them: Let them think of you as a Protector in my stead, rather than as an ingrateful Spoiler among them; and you will then give Comfort to my Life, as long as God shall spare it, and alleviate, instead of aggravating, the Pangs of my dying Hour, when God shall send it.

it

ry

ly

10 do

WC

ils,

of;

and ght

my

the un ion

Son

5000 on nily

hes

WI thin

e yo

tou

My dear, dear Son, I conjure you, by all our past Tenderness and Affection for you, by our Hopes,

74 Familiar LETTERS on the

Hopes, and our Fears, from Infancy to Manhood, to think of all these Things; reslect upon the Transitoriness of worldly Enjoyments, even when better chosen than yours are. Judge of the Pleafures you expect in your present Course, by the Vanity of the past; of your next Assignations, by the aching Head, and undelighted Heart, which followed the last; and you will find, that no Satisfaction, which is not grounded on Virtue and Sobriety, can be durable, or worthy of a rational Creature.

Your good Mother, who joins her Tears so often with mine, to deplore the sad Prospect your ill Courses give us, joins also her Prayers to mine, that this my last Effort may be attended with Success; and that you will not let us intreat in vain. Amen, Amen, says

Your indulgent and afflicted Father.

in

Sin

my

Op.

dese

who

a Spa to br

Panio Advice Contin

and H

much

past E

shall a

LETTER LVII.

The Son's dutiful Answer.

Honoured Sir,

I AM greatly affected with the tender and moving Goodness expressed in your indulgent Letter. I am exceedingly forry, that all your good Advice before has been so cast away upon me, as to render this further Instance of your paternal Affection necessary. I am resolved instantly to set about a Reformation, and to conform myself intirely to your good Pleasure for the suture; and I beg, Sir, the Continuance of yours, and my good Mother's Prayers to God, to enable me to adhere to my present good Resolutions. I have so often promised, and so often broken my Word (rather (rather indeed thro' the Strength of my Paffins, than a Design of Non-performance), that I think, I ought now to give you some Proof, that I am in earnest; and what better can I give, than to assure you, that I will henceforth break myself from the frothy Companions I used to take too much Delight in, and whose lewd Banters and Temptations have so frequently set aside my good Purposes? You, Sir, for the future, shall recommend the Company proper for me to keep; and I beg you will chalk out for me the Paths in which you would have me tread, and, as much as possible, I will walk in them; and when I have convinced you of the Sincerity of my Reformation, I hope, Sir, you and my honoured Mother will restore me to your good Opinions, which it shall be my constant Study to deserve. I have already broken with George Negus, who attempted to laugh me out of my good Resolutions: And I beg Leave to wait upon you for such a Space of Time as you shall think proper, in order to break myself from the rest of my profligate Companions, and that I may have the Benefit of your Advice and Direction for my future Conduct. God continue long (for the Benefit of us all) your Life and Health, and make me happy in contributing as much to your future Comforts, as I have, by my palt Excesses, to your Trouble of Mind, is, and thall always be, the Prayer of, Honoured Sir,

Your truly penitent and dutiful Son.

d ur

n aly ye;

my
to ord ner

LETTER LVIII.

To a Friend, on Occasion of his not answering his Letters.

Dear Sir,

IT is so long since I had the Favour of a Line from you, that I am under great Apprehensions in relation to your Health and Welfare. I beg you, Sir, to renew to me the Pleasure you used to give me in your Correspondence; for I have written three Letters to you before this; to which I have had no Answer, and am not conscious of having any way disobliged you. If I have, I will most willingly ask your Pardon; for nobody can be more than I am,

Your affectionate and faithful Friend and Servant.

LETTER LIX.

In Answer to the preceding.

Dear Sir,

Y O U have not, cannot disoblige me; but I have greatly disobliged myself, in my own faulty Remissiness. I cannot account for it as I ought. To say I had Business one time, Company another, was distant from home a third, will be but poor Excuses, for not answering one of your kind Letters in sour long Months. I therefore ingenuously take Shame to myself, and promise future Amendment; and that nothing shall ever, while I am able to hold a Pen, make me guilty of the like Neglect to a Friend I love so well, and have you all fine and

L

you and com yet to fore y bear t latter Confid

go bac mon S

Refle upon to Trader which, the Ind. whose N have so much Reason so to do. Forgive me then, my good, my kind, my generous Friend; and believe me ever

Your highly obliged humble Servant.

LETTER LX.

From a Father to a Son, on his Negligence in his Affairs.

Dear Jemmy,

YOU cannot imagine what a Concern your Carelessness and indifferent Management of your Affairs give me. Remissness is inexcusable in all Men, but in none so much as in a Man of Business, the Soul of which is Industry, Diligence, and Punctuality.

I

y

e

11 re

se!

er,

ot

nd

ve

Let me beg of you to shake off the idle Habits you have contracted; quit unprofitable Company, and unseasonable Recreations, and apply to your Compting-house with Diligence. It may not be yet too late to retrieve your Affairs. Inspect therefore your Gains, and cast up what Proportion they bear to your Expences; and then see which of the latter you can, and which you cannot contract. Consider, that when once a Man suffers himself to go backward in the World, it must be an uncommon Spirit of Industry that retrieves him, and puts him forward again.

Reflect, I beseech you, before it be too late, upon the Inconveniencies which an impoverish'd Trader is put to, for the Remainder of his Life; which, too, may happen to be the prime Part of it; the Indignities he is likely to suffer from those whose Money he has unthinkingly squander'd; the

E 3-

Con-

Contempt he will meet with from all, not excepting the idle Companions of his Folly; the Injustice he does his Family, in depriving his Children, not only of the Power of raising themselves, but of living tolerably; and how, on the contrary, from being born to a creditable Expectation, he finks them into the lowest Class of Mankind, and exposes them to the most dangerous Temptations. What has not such a Father to answer for! and all this for the fake of indulging himself in an idle, a careless, a thoughtless Habit, that cannot afford the least Satisfaction, beyond the present Hour, if in that; and which must be attended with deep Remorfe, when he comes to reflect. Think ferioully of these Things, and in time resolve on such a Course as may bring Credit to yourself, Justice to all you deal with, Peace and Pleasure to your own Mind, Comfort to your Family; and which will give at the same time the highest Satisfaction to Your careful and loving Father.

LETTER LXI.

The Son's grateful Answer.

Honoured Sir,

I Return you my fincere Thanks for your seafonable Reproof and Advice. I have indeed too much indulged myself in an idle careless Habit, and had already begun to seel the evil Consequences of it, when I received your Letter, in the Insults of a Creditor or two, from whom I expected kinder Treatment. But indeed they wanted but their own; so I could only blame myself, who had brought their rough Usage upon me. Your Letter came so seasonably upon this, that I hope it will

1

to prol mul

We I neve

a Pe

near as I the I

Atkin

Gent

who

the fr

the 1

Re

not want the defired Effect; and as, I thank God, it is not yet too late, I am refolved to take another Course with myself and my Affairs, that I may avoid the ill Consequences you so judiciously forewarn me of, and give to my Family and Friends the Pleasure they so well deserve at my Hands; and particularly that Satisfaction to so good a Father, which is owing to him by His most dutiful Son.

LETTER LXII.

A young Woman in Town to her Sister in the Country, recounting her narrow Escape from a Snare laid for her on her first Arrival, by a wicked Procuress.

Dear Sifter,

WE have often, by our good Mother, been warned against the Dangers that would too probably attend us on coming to London; tho' I must own, her Admonitions had not always the Weight I am now convinced they deserved.

I have had a Deliverance from such a Snare, as I never could have believed would have been laid for a Person free from all Thought of Ill, or been so near succeeding upon one so strongly on her Guard as I imagined myself: And thus, my dear Sister,

the Matter happened:

Returning, on Tuesday, from seeing my Cousin Atkins, in Cheapside, I was overtaken by an elderly Gentlewoman of a sober and creditable Appearance, who walked by my Side some little time before she spoke to me; and then guessing (by my asking the Name of the Street), that I was a Stranger to the Town, she very courteously began a Discourse with me, and after some other Talk, and Questions about my Country, and the like, desired to know, If I did not come to Town with a Design of going into some genteel Place? I told her, If I could meet with a Place to my Mind, to wait upon a single Lady, I should be very willing to embrace it. She said, I look'd like a creditable, sober, and modest Body; and at that very time she knew one of the best Gentlewomen that ever lived, who was in great Want of a Maid to attend upon her own Person; and that if she liked me, and I her, it would be a lucky Incident for us both.

EA

I expressed myself thankfully, and she was so very much in my Interest, as to intreat me to go instantly to the Lady, lest she should be provided, and acquaint her I was recommended by Mrs. Jones, not doubting, as she said, but, on Inquiry, my Character would answer my Appearance.

As that, you know, was partly my View in comeing to Town, I thought this a happy Incident, and determined not to lose the Opportunity; and so, according to the Direction she gave me, I went to inquire for Mrs. C ---- in J ---- n's Court, Fleetfireet. The Neighbourhood look'd genteel, and I foon found the House. I ask'd for Mrs. C----; The came to me, dress'd in a splendid manner; I told her what I came about; she immediately defir'd me to walk into the Parlour, which was elegantly furnish'd; and after asking me several Que-Itions, with my Answers to which she seem'd very well pleas'd, a Servant foon brought in a Bowl of warm Liquor, which she call'd Negus, confisting of Wine, Water, Orange, &c. which, she faid, was for a Friend or two she expected presently; but as I was warm with walking, she would have me drink some of it, telling me it was a pleasant innocent Liquor,

h fo

co Ar W

in tell enf her

fhe take Day the inco wou and

Tha caufe who Mati

I

with her n stand Aunt fo nea thoug

tenan

and she always used her Waiting-maids, as she did herself. I thought this was very kind and condescending, and being warm and thirsty, and she encouraging me, I took a pretty free Draught of it, and thought it very pleasant, as it really was. She made me sit down by her, saying, Pride was not her Talent, and that she should always indulge me in like manner, if I behaved well, when she had not Company; and then slightly ask'd, What I could do, and the Wages I required? With my Answers she seemed well satisfied, and granted the Wages I asked, without any Offer of Abatement.

And then I rose up, in order to take my Leave, telling her I would, any Day she pleased, of the ensuing Week, bring my Cloaths, and wait upon her.

٧

f

r

S

e

She said, That her own Maid being gone away, she was in the utmost Want of another, and would take it kindly, if I would stay with her till next Day, because she was to have some Ladies to pass the Evening with her. I said this would be pretty inconvenient to me, but as she was so situated, I would oblige her, after I had been with my Aunt, and acquainted her with it. To this she reply'd, That there was no manner of Occasion for that, because she could send the Cook for what I wanted, who could, at the same time, tell my Aunt how Matters stood.

I thought this looked a little odd; but she did it with so much Civility, and seemed so pleased with her new Maid, that I scarcely knew how to withstand her: But the Apprehension I had of my Aunt's Anger for not asking her Advice, in what so nearly concern'd me, made me insist upon going, though I could perceive Displeasure in her Countenance when she saw me resolv'd.

82 Familiar LETTERS on the

She then ply'd me very close with the Liquor, which she again said was innocent and weak; but I believe it was far otherwise; for my Head began to turn round, and my Stomach selt a little disordered. I intreated the Favour of her to permit me to go, on a firm Promise of returning immediately; but then my new Mistress began to raise her Voice a little, assuring me I should on no Account shir out of her House. She lest the Room, in a fort of a Pet, but said she would send the Cook to take my Directions to my Aunt; and I heard her take the Key out of the outward Door.

This alarmed me very much; and, in the Inftant of my Surprize, a young Gentlewoman enter'd the Parlour, dress'd in white Sattin, and every way genteel; she sat down in a Chair next me, looked earnestly at me a while, and seemed going to speak several times, but did not. At length she rose from her Chair, bolted the Parlour-door, and, breaking into a Flood of Tears, express'd herself

" Dear young Woman, I cannot tell you the

as follows:

"Pain I feel on your Account; and from an Inclination to ferve you, I run a Hazard of involving myself in greater Misery than I have yet experienced, if that can be. But my Heart is yet too honest to draw others, as I am desir'd to do, into a Snare which I have fallen into myself. You are now in as notorious a Brothel, as is in London: And if you escape not in a few Hours, you are inevitably undone. I was once as innocent as you now feem to be. No Apprehension you can be under for your Virtue, but I felt as much:

My Reputation was as unspotted, and my Heart as unvers'd in Ill, when I first enter'd these guilty

Coors, whither I was fent on an Errand, much like what I understand has brought you hither. I

W25

"

66

66

66

46 (

"

46 1

" y

" a

Hea

I tre

for f

I tha

woul

Whie

to the

him

and] run o

Y

and

" was by Force detained the whole Night, as you " are defigned to be; was robbed of my Virtue; " and knowing I should hardly be forgiven by my " Friends for staying out without their Know-" lege, and in the Morning being at a Loss, all in " Confusion as I was, what to do, before I could " refolve on any thing, I was obliged to repeat my "Guilt, and had hardly Time afforded me to re-" flect on its fatal Consequences. My Liberty I " intreated to no Purpose, and my Grief serv'd for " the cruel Sport of all around me. In short, I " have been now fo long confined, that I am " ashamed to appear among my Friends and Ac-" quaintance. In this dreadful Situation, I have " been perplexed with the hateful Importunities of " different Men every Day; and tho' I long re-" fifted to my utmost, yet downright Force never " failed to overcome. Thus in a shameful Round " of Guilt and Horror, have I lingered out Ten " Months; subject to more Miseries than Tongue " can express. The same sad Lot is intended you, " nor will it be easy to shun it: However, as I can-" not well be more miserable than I am, I will affift " you what I can; and not, as the wretched Pro-" curess hopes, contribute to make you as unhappy " as myfelf."

C

),

u

2-

u

11

u

1:

rt

I

You may guess at the Terror that seized my Heart, on this sad Story, and my own Danger; I trembled in every Joint, nor was I able to speak for some time; at last, in the best manner I could, I thanked my unhappy new Friend, and begg'd she would kindly give me the Assistance she offered: Which she did; for the first Gentleman that came to the Door, she stept up herself for the Key to let him in, which the wretched Procures gave her; and I took that Opportunity, as she directed, to run out of the House, and that in so much Hurry

84 Familiar LETTERS on the

and Confusion, as to leave my Hood, Fan, and Gloves behind me.

I told my Aunt every Circumstance of my Danger and Escape, and received a severe Reprimand for my following so inconsiderately, in so wicked a Town as this, the Direction of an intire Stranger.

I am fure, Sister, you rejoice with me for my Deliverance. And this Accident may serve to teach us to be upon our Guard for the future, as well against the viler Part of our own Sex, as that of the other. I am, dear Sister,

Your truly affectionate Sifter.

N. B. This shocking Story is taken from the Mouth of the young Woman herself, who so narrowly escaped the Snare of the vile Procures; and is Fact in every Circumstance.

LETTER LXIII.

To a Daughter in a Country Town, who encourages the Address of a Subaltern [A Case too frequent in Country Places.]

Dear Betfy,

I HAVE been under the deepest Assistion ever fince I heard of your encouraging the Addresses of a Soldier, whether Serjeant or Corporal, I know not; who happens to quarter next Door to your Uncle.

What, my dear Child, can you propose by such a Match? Is his Pay sufficient to maintain himself? If it be, will it be sufficient for the Support of a Family?

Confider,

inc wil you a V low of t

dier and vete and muf poffe

how temp he de Be as I

for mily Char vaftly will of fu have charg

Consider, there will be no Opportunity for you to increase his poor Income, but by such Means as will be very grating for you to submit to: Will your Hands be capable of enduring the Fatigues of, a Wash-tub, for your Maintenance? Or, will solowing a Camp suit your Inclinations? Think well of the certain Misery that must attend your making such a Choice.

Look round at the Wives of all his Fellow-foldiers, and mark their Appearance at their Homes, and in Publick. Is their abject Condition to be coveted? Do you fee any thing defirable in Poverty and Rags? And, as to the Man for whom you must endure all this, he may possibly indeed be possessed of Honesty, and a Defire to do his best for you, at least you may think so; but is it probable he will? For if he be wise and industrious, how came he to prefer a Life so mean and contemptible? If he was bred to any Trade, why did he desert it?

Be cautious of pushing yourself into Ruin, and as I am not able to maintain you, and a young Family, do not throw yourself upon the uncertain Charity of well-disposed People; who are already vastly incumbered by the Miserable. I hope you will not thus rashly increase the unhappy Number of such, but will give due Attention to what I have said; for I can have no View, but that of discharging the Duty of

W

Your loving Father.

LETTER LXIV.

Of Expostulation from a grave Friend to a young Man, on his slighting and irreverent Behaviour to bis Father.

Dear Sir,

TAKE the Freedom of a brief Expostulation with you on your Behaviour to your Father; and I hope you will receive it from me, with the same Good-will, that I mean it.

His Indulgence to you formerly, certainly claims better Returns on your Part, altho' it should be allow'd, as you fondly imagine, that his Affection to you is alienated. There may be fomething of Petulancy in him, which you ought to bear with; for one time or other you may be convinced by Experience, that Age itself has its insuperable Afflictions, that require the Allowance of every one; and more particularly of fuch who hope to live a long Life themselves, and still more particularly of a Son, whose high Passions, require, perhaps, at least as much Allowance. He may be petulant; but are you not fiery and impetuous? And I would fain know, whether you ought to bear with him, or he with you?

'Tis a very groundless Surmize to think his Affections are alienated from you. A Father must love his Son. He cannot help it. And is it credible even to yourself, on cool Reflection, that the fame good Man who was wont to be delighted with your childish Vanities and Foibles (for we have all had them more or less), and even indulged and perhaps cherished those youthful Forwardnesses, that might be called the Seeds of those Passions, which

W

th fro W

yo

be yet

oth

that

tion

and conf

him

but t genc

tor 1

Wee

let m

Refle

be is t

faulty

feen th

Kind,

of the

Grand Curfe

childless

gracious tail'd by neration

Iha tions c

now, being sprung up, give him so much Disturbance, and make you so impatient of Contradiction; Can you, I say, believe that this same good Man, without Reason, without Provocation, can change that Love into Hate?

n

he ns

alto e-

h;

Ri-

ie;

e a

of

, at nt;

im,

Af-

mult

cre-

the

with e all per-

that hich

ewon

You are grown to Man's Estate, and tho' far from the ungracious Sons, that we have feen in the World, yet ought not to be so partial to yourself, as to believe you are wholly faultless. Examine your own Conduct then, and altho' you should not be able to charge your Intention with any Blame, vet you must leave your Behaviour to be judg'd by others; and 'twill perhaps be given against you. that fome Slight, fome Negligence, fome Inattention, if not worse, too cutting for a Father's Cares and Fondness to support, has escaped you. Then confider, Sir, what a grievous thing it must be to him to reflect, that this Behaviour of yours may be but the gradual Consequence of his former Indulgence to you; and that he is deservedly punished, for not rooting up in your childish Days those Weeds which now spread to his Uneasiness. let me tell you, Sir, that it ought to be a more fad Reflection to a confiderate young Gentleman, that be is to be the Instrument to punish his fond Father's faulty Indulgence to himfelf.

I have been a diligent Observer of the Dispensations of Providence in this respect; and have always seen the Sin of Undutifulness to Parents punished in Kind, more than any one Sin. I have seen the Son of the unce tiful Son, revenging the Cause of his Grandfather; and at the same time, intail'd a Curse upon his Son, if he has not been taken off childless, who, in his Turn, has retorted the ungracious Behaviour; and thus a Curse has been intail'd by Descent upon the Family, from one Geperation to another.

You'll

1

You'll fay, that your Behaviour to your Father is not, you hope, of such an atrocious Nature, as to be attended with fuch terrible Confequences; and perhaps will add, that you do not wish for a better Behaviour from your Son, than you shew to your Father. But if this be not Partiality to yourfelf, pray confider, that while your Father takes your present Conduct in so ill Part, and you use so little Circumspection to avoid giving him Disgust, and have so little Complaifance, as not to set him right; the thing is full as tormenting to him from the Appearance, as if it were real; nay, 'tis real to

th

Re

by lef

firm

an duc

a bi of h

fpec

Nun

you

youn

Parer

reflec

ioiced

Dawn

dwelt which

Tende

Failing

brough

motest

ways, a of Age :

Slights

of his pa

ure to 1

hink it,

owever

oves you

our Be light or

I have

egan, an

Or

I

him, if he believes fo.

He thinks, and let me tell you, Sir, he thinks justly, that he ought to expect as much Deference to his Will and Pleasure now, as he has heretofore shewn you Indulgence, even in those Things that now perhaps you are fo unkind to fuffer to turn feverest upon him. I would not recriminate: But it was with very little Reverence, and indeed with an Air as censurable as the Words, that you told him, in my Hearing, that he knew not what he would have: That he expected you to be more accountable at this Age, than when you were a Child, &c. Why, dear Sir, does your being of Age, lessen the Duty you owe to your Father? Are not his Cares for you allowably doubled? And ought he not now to expect from your good Sense, and more mature Understanding (improved, as it is to be hoped, by the Education he has, at a great Expence, given you), greater Proofs of Duty, rather than less? He may forget, perhaps, what he was at your Age, as you irreverently told him; but how much more laudable would it be, for you, at yours, to enter into what you would naturally expect from your Son, were you in the Place, and at the Age, of your Father! A generous Mind will do its Duty, tho tho' it were not to meet with suitable Rewards or Returns; for even should your Father not do his by you, you are not absolved of yours to him; much less then ought the natural, the consequential, Infirmities of Age, to dissolve the Duty of a Son to an indulgent Parent.

;

to

res

fo

ft,

im

m

to iks

nce

ore

hat

fe-tit

an im,

uld

nt-

&c.

the ares

low

ture

by ven

S ?

your

uch

, to

rom e, of uty,

tho

Be convinced, my dear Sir, of your wrong Conduct, and don't think it beneath the high Spirit of a brave young Gentleman, to submit to the Will of his Father. By your Dutifulness and Circumspection you may, in all Probability, add to the Number as well as the Comfort of his Days to whom you owe your Being. But what a Woe does that young Man bring upon himself, who robs his aged Parent in both respects! It behoves all Children to reflect upon this timely, and with Awe.

On how many Occasions has he heretofore rejoiced to me, on, even, the smallest Openings and Dawnings of your Mind and Genius! How has he dwelt upon your Praises on even supposed Beauties, which have appeared such to his fond and partial Tenderness only! How has he extenuated your failings, connived at your Faults, and extolled and brought forward into strong Light, even the remotest Appearance of Virtue in you! Such were always, and fuch, notwithstanding the Intermixtures of Age and Infirmity, and even of your continued Slights and Impatience, always will be, the Instances his paternal Affection for you. And I will venure to fay, that even this very Petulance, as you hink it, is a Demonstration of his Regard for you, lowever difagreeable it may be to you, fince he oves you too well to be insensible to those Parts of our Behaviour, which he thinks are owing to light or Negligence.

I have exceeded the Bounds I intended when I gan, and would rather leave to your natural good

Senfe,

90 Familiar LETTERS on the Sense, and cooler Reflection, what I have already urged, than tire you too much, with what might still farther be added on this Occasion. But the Assection and Friendship I have for all your Family, and the long Intimacy I have had with your good Father (who, however, knows nothing of my writeing), and the evil Consequences that may follow a wider Breach between you, will answer for my Intention, and, I hope, for my Freedom, which I will take upon me to say, I expect from your Candor and Education, being

Your sincere Friend to serve you.

LETTER LXV.

Against too great a Love of Singing and Musick.

Dear Coufin,

AM fure you have the good Sense to take kindly what I am going to mention to you, in which I can have no possible View but your Benefit. When you were last with me at-Hertford, you much obliged us all with the Instances you gave us of your Skill in Musick, and your good Voice. But as you are so young a Man, and seem to be so very much pleased yourself with these Acquirements, I must enter a Caution or two on this Score, because of the Consequences that may follow from too much Delight in these Amusements, which, while they are pursued as Amusements only, may be safe and innocent; but when they take up too much of a Man's Time, may be not a little pernicious.

In the first place, my dear Cousin, these Pleasures of Sound may take you off from the more desirable ones of Sense, and make your Delights flog place ful muc

pany and usefu negli paire

haun what a fine

In

mand For Profic

what in other othe

o light fouth a aying the Mind, Years,

hat ca fit: A facultic reat St

o it, improve urning elf, one stop

ady

fill

Af-

ily, boo

ite-wa In-

will and 10 B.

and

ndly

ich I

hen

ob-

your

you nuch

must fe of much they

e and of a

Plea-

more

lights

flop at the Ear, which should go deeper, and be placed in the Understanding. For whenever a chearful Singer is in Company, adieu to all Conversation much of an improving or intellectual Nature!

In the fecond place, it may expose you to Company, and that not the best and most eligible neither; and by which your Business, and your other more useful Studies, may be greatly, if not wholly, neglected, and very possibly your Health itself impaired.

In the third place, it may tend (for so it naturally does) to enervate the Mind, and make you haunt musical Societies, Operas and Concerts; and what Glory is it to a Gentleman, if he were even a fine Performer, that he can strike a String, touch a Key, or sing a Song, with the Grace and Command of a hired Musician?

Fourthly, Musick, to arrive at any tolerable Proficiency in it, takes up much Time, and requires fomuch Application, as leaves but little Room, and, what is worse, when delighted in, little Inclination or other Improvements: And as Life is a short tage, where longest, surely the most precious Moments of it ought to be better employ'd, than in b light and airy an Amusement. The Time of buth will be soon over, and that is the Time of aying the Foundation of more folid Studies. and, as well as the Body, will become fliff by fears, and unsusceptible of those Improvements, hat cannot be attained, but in particular Periods fit: And, when once an airy Delight engages the aculties, a Habit is formed; and nothing but reat Struggle, and absolute Necessity, if that will oit, can shake it off. One Part of Life is for mprovement, that is, Youth; another Part is for ming that Improvement to folid Benefits to one's elf, one's Family, or Acquaintance; that is, the middle middle Part; another Part carries a Retrospect to a future State: And shall we lose the Time of Improvement, which can never come again; forfeit all the Benefits of it, in our Middle-life, and imbitter our future Prospects, as well mundane as eternal, with Reflections on our past Neglect of Opportunities that never can be recalled? And all for what? Why, only to be deemed, for eight or ten empty Years of Life, a good Companion, as the Phrase is:--- Tho', perhaps, a bad Husband, a bad Father, a bad Friend, and, of course, a bad Man!

Some there are, who divide Life into four Stages or Opportunities. He, they fay, who is not handfome by Twenty, strong by Thirty, wife by Forty, rich by Fifty, will never be either handsome, strong, wife, or rich. And this, generally speaking, is a good and improving Observation; which should teach us, as we go along, to make a right Use of those Periods of Life, which may be proper Entrances for us into a still more important one than that behind it.

I have but lightly touched on these weighty Points, because I know you have good Sense enough to improve as much from Hints, as others can from tedious Lectures. And when I have repeated, that I am far from diffuading you from these Amuse ments, while they are restrained to due Bounds, and are regarded as Amusements only; I know you will think me, what I always defire to be thought, and what I truly am,

Your affectionate Uncle,

and sincere Friend

LET

Fron

b

H

T ome

Fault.

as o

Robin

and i nd en ren a hat yo our ou This ood a der, t

ay be er owi

nconfic

ot hav

ad you

y poor encor

ind Far tion, a hich h really v Yet ishes, rfelf at

LETTER LXVI.

From a Daughter to her Father, pleading for her Sister, who had married without his Consent.

Honoured Sir,

to

of or-

and

e as

l all t or

the bad in!

ages

andorty,

rong,

is a nould

fe of

En-

than ighty

from

, that mule

s, and

u wil

t, and

riend

THE kind Indulgence you have always shewn to your Children, makes me presume to become an Advocate for my Sister, tho' not for her fault. She is very sensible of that, and sorry she as offended you; but has great Hopes, that Mr. Robinson will prove such a careful and loving Husand to her, as may atone for his past Wildness, and engage your Forgiveness. For all your Chilten are sensible of your paternal Kindness, and hat you wish their Good more for their sakes, than our own.

This makes it the more wicked to offend fo ood a Father: But, dear Sir, be pleased to conder, that it now cannot be helped, and that she ay be made by your Displeasure very miserable in er own Choice; and as his Faults are owing to the aconsideration of Youth, or otherwise it would ot have been a very discreditable Match, had it ad your Approbation, I could humbly hope, for y poor Sifter's sake, that you will be pleased rather encourage his present good Resolutions by your nd Favour, than make him despair of a Reconcition, and so perhaps treat her with a Negligence, hich hitherto she is not apprehensive of: For he really very fond of her, and I hope will continue Yet is she dejected for her Fault to you, and thes, yet dreads, to have your Leave to throw rielf at your Feet, to beg your Forgiveness and Bleffing, Bleffing, which would make the poor dear Offender quite happy.

Pardon, Sir, my interposing in her Favour, in which my Husband also joins. She is my Sister. She is your Daughter; tho' she has not done so worthily as I wish, to become that Character. Be pleased, Sir, to forgive her, however; and also forgive me, pleading for her: Who am,

Your ever dutiful Daughter.

LETTER LXVII.

The Father's Answer.

My dear Nanny,

YOU must believe, that your Sister's unadvised Marriage, which she must know would be disagreeable to me, gives me no small Concern; and yet, I will assure you, that it arises more from my Affection for her, than any other Consideration. In her Education I took all the Pains and Care my Circumstances would admit, and often slattered myself with the Hope, that the happy Fruits of it would be made appear in her prudent Conduct. What she has now done is not vicious, but indiscreet; for, you must remember, that I have often declared in her Hearing, that the wild Assertion, of a Rake making a good Husband, was the most dangerous Opinion a young Woman could imbibe.

I will not, however, in Pity to her, point out the many Ills I am afraid will attend her Rashness, because it is done, and cannot be helped; but with she may be happier than I ever saw a Woman who leap'd so fatal a Precipice.

Her Husband has this Morning been with me for her Fortune; and it was with much Temper I told at n ner vant

the I bit h

To be affi

nent: vill fo han h

You ind you spect. ruden

a B Child Conv

Dear HE Unv t may s Meti

tion I ceive g told him, That as all she could hope for was wholly at my Disposal, I should disburse it in such a manner as I thought would most contribute to her Advantage; and that, as he was a Stranger to me, I hould chuse to know he deserved it, before he had he Power over what I intended to do for her. He bit his Lip, and, with a hafty Step, was my humble Servant.

Tell the rash Girl, that I would not have her to e afflicted at this Behaviour in me; for I know it vill contribute to her Advantage one way or other: f he married her for her own fake, she will find o Alteration of Behaviour from this Disappointnent: But if he married her only for her Money, she vill foon be glad to find it in my Possession, rather han his.

)f-

in

er.

So

Be

alfo

ter.

rifed

dif-

and

my

tion. e my tered

of it duct.

indif-

often

on, of mott bibe.

ut the s, bet with n who

th me

mper

tolo

Your Interposition in her Behalf is very fisterly: nd you see I have not the Resentment she might spect. But would to God she had acted with your rudence! For her own sake I wish it. Your loving Father.

LETTER LXVIII.

a Brother, against making his Wife and Children the constant Subject of his Praise and Conversation.

Dear Brother,

HE Love I have always had for you, and an Unwillingness I find in myself to say any thing t may put you to Confusion, have made me take s Method of acquainting you with a small Indistion I have often observed in you, and which I ceive gradually to gain Ground as your Family reales.

What I mean, is an immoderate Inclination to make your Spoufe, and your Children, the Subject of Discourse where-ever you are. Imagine not that any Pique or Dislike draws this from me: My Sifter, I think, is possessed of as many valuable Qualities as most of her Sex; and all your Children are very promising. No wonder then, that this View makes a very deep Impression upon so tender a Heart as yours; and the Fondness of a Husband, and of a Father, is what must make you esteemed by all who confider the many Advantages arifing from thence to Posterity. But a Mind full of Affection for what is fo dear to himself, stands in need of the utmost Care, to keep what concerns only himfelf, from employing too much the Attention of others: What affects you most fensibly upon this Subject, is, even by your Friends, heard rather with an Ear of Censure than Applause. And what the tender Bias of a Father swells in your Conception to the most witty Repartee, to an Ear destitute of that Bias, founds neither witty, nor uncommon; and you cannot mortify many Men more, than by dragging out an unwilling Ay, very pretty indeed, Sir! A charming Boy! or, Such a Saying was far above his Years, truly. Which kind of yawning Applause is sometimes, by your Attention being strongly fixed to your Story, mistaken for Approbation; and you thereupon launch out farther upon the same Subject, when your Hearers are scarce able to conceal their Inattention. Besides, don' you confider, that another Man may have as great Fondness for his, as you have for yours; and while your Children are the wittiest, the beautifullest, th hopefullest in England, do you not tacitly reflect upon every other Man's Children in the Company

k

te te

of tat

Ar

From

D

m

IW

in you

Moth

of cha fake:

that I

that the in you give m

To me, I grant you full Liberty to say whatever you please; nay, several little Tricks you tell of Patty and Tommy are agreeable enough to me, and some I think even entertaining; but to others, have a close Guard upon yourself, lest when you try to get your Children admired, you should get yourself despised. Let you and me, as Father and Uncle, keep all their little Whimsies to ourselves; for as Strangers share not in the Affection and Expence attending them, why should they partake in the Entertainment they afford?

I hope my constant Behaviour has convinced you of my fincere Regard for your Interest and Reputation: What I have said, I mean for your Benefit: And you know me too well, to think otherwise of Your tenderly affectionate Brother.

LETTER LXIX.

From a Father to a Daughter, in Dislike of her Intentions to marry at too early an Age.

Dear Sally,

a ot

e:

ole en

his der

nd,

ned ling

Af-

need

him-n of this

what ption ate of

mon;

ndeed,

ias far being

Appro

er upon

carc

, don

as grea

nd while left, th y reflec

npany!

I WAS greatly furprifed at the Letter you fent me last Week. I was willing to believe I saw in you, for your Years, so much of your late dear Mother's Temper, Prudence, and virtuous Disposition, that I refused several advantageous Offers of changing my own Condition, purely for your sake: And will you now convince me so early, that I have no Return to expect from you, but that the Moment a young Fellow throws himself in your way, you have nothing else to do, but to give me Notice to provide a Fortune for you? For that that you intend to be of no further Use and Service to me. This, in plain English, is the Meaning of your Notification. For I suppose your young Man does not intend to marry you, without a Fortune. And can you then think, that a Father has nothing to do, but to confer Benefits on his Children, without being intitled to expect any Return from them?

To be fure, I had proposed, at a proper Time, to find a Husband for you; but I thought I had yet three or four Years to come. For, consider, Sally, you are not fully Sixteen Years of Age: And a Wise, believe me, ought to have some better Qualifications, than an agreeable Person, to preserve a Husband's Esteem, tho' it often is enough to attract a Lover's Notice.

Have you Experience enough, think you, difcreetly to conduct the Affairs of a Family? I thought you as yet not quite capable to manage my House; and I am sure, my Judgment always took a Bias in your Favour.

Besides, let me tell you, I have great Exceptions to the Person, and think him by no means the Man I would chuse for your Husband. For which, if it has not too late. I will give good Reasons

On the Whole, you must expect, if yo

On the Whole, you must expect, if you marry without my Consent, to live without my Assistance. Think it not hard: Your Disappointment cannot be greater than mine, if you will proceed. I have never used violent Measures to you on any Occasion, and shall not on this. But yet I earnestly hope you will not hurry yourself to Destruction, and me perhaps to the Grave, by an Action which a little Consideration may so easily prevent. I am

Your afflicted Father.

fr

qu

th

H

tha

gay

wh

too

mo pre

care

a F

char

be t

Spiri

he is fellor

unab

is the luited

Artist

Stands Land:

of his Estate

He

LETTER LXX.

From a Father to a Daughter, against a frothy, French Lover.

Dear Polly,

et

2

2-

a

atlif-

1 5

7117 ook

ions

Man

if it arry

ance.

nnot

have alion,

e you

d me

litte

ather.

ET-

I Cannot say I look upon Mr. La Farriere in the fame favourable Light that you feem to do. His frothy Behaviour may divert well enough as an Acquaintance; but is very unanswerable, I think, to the Character of a Husband, especially an English Husband, which I take to be a graver Character than a French one. There is a Difference in these gay Gentlemen, while they strive to please, and when they expect to be obliged. In all Men this is too apparent; but in those of a light Turn it is more visible than in others. If after Marriage his present Temper should continue, when you are a careful Mother, he will look more like a Son than a Husband: If entering into the World should change his Disposition, expect no Medium; he will be the most insipid Mortal you can imagine: If his Spirits should be depressed by the Accidents of Life, he is such a Stranger to Reflection (the best Counsellor of the Wise), that from thence he will be unable to draw Relief. And Adversity to such Men is the more intolerable, as their Deportment is fuited only to the Smiles of Success.

He dances well; writes very indifferently: Is an Artist at Cards; but cannot cast Accompts: Understands all the Laws of Chance; but not one of the Land: Has shewn great Skill in the Improvement of his Person; yet none at all, that I hear, of his Estate: And tho' he makes a good Figure in Company, has never yet studied the Art of living at Home: He sings well; but knows nothing of Business: He has long acted the Part of a Lover; but may not find the same Variety and Entertainment in acting the Husband: Is very gallant; but may not be over affectionate: And is so tender of himself, that he will have little Time to indulge any body else.----These, Child, are my Sentiments of him; you are not wholly ignorant of the World: I defire to guide, not to force, your Inclinations; and hope your calm Reason will banish all farther Thoughts of this Gentleman, who, however you may like him for a Partner at a Ball, feems not so well qualified for a Journey through the various Trials, from which no Station can exempt the married State.

Your affectionate Father.

T

ma. Dif

and den

vinc

It de

be th far a deny morre

ing y feffior

of the

the P

becaus

LETTER LXXI.

A modest Lover desiring an Aunt's Favour to her Niece.

Good Madam,

HAVE feveral times, that I have been happy in the Company of your beloved Niece, thought to have spoken my Mind, and to declare to her the true Value and Affection I have for her. But just as I have been about to speak, my Fears have vanquish'd my Hopes, and I have been obliged to fuspend my Purpose. I have thrown out several Hints, that I thought would have led the Way to a fuller Disclosing of the Secret that is too big for my Breaft, and yet, when I am near her, is too important for Utterance. Will you be fo good, Madam, to break way for me, if I am not wholly difapproved approved of by you; and prepare her dear Mind for a Declaration that I must make, and yet know not how to begin?----My Fortune and Expectations make me hope, that I may not on those Accounts be deemed unworthy: And could I, by half a Line from your Hand, hope, that there is no other Bar, I should be enabled to build on so desirable a Foundation, and to let your Niece know, how much my Happiness depends upon her Favour. Excuse, dear Madam, I beseech you, this Trouble, and this presumptuous Request, from Your most obliged and obedient Servant.

LETTER LXXII.

The Aunt's Answer, supposing the Gentleman deserves Encouragement.

SIR,

e

0 ır

is a

er.

ber

ppy

her

But

have

ed to veral

v to a ig for

o im-

Ma-

v dif-

roved

Cannot say I have any Dislike, as to my own part, to your Prop sal, or your Manner of making it, whatever my Niece may have; because Diffidence is generally the Companion of Merit, and a Token of Respect: She is a Person of Prudence, and all her Friends are so throughly convinced of it, that her Choice will have the Weight it deserves with us all: So I cannot say, what will be the Event of your Declaration to her. Yet, so far as I may take upon myself to do, I will notdeny your Request; but on her Return to me Tomorrow will break the Ice, as you defire, not doubting your Honour, and the Sincerity of your Professions; and I shall tell her moreover what I think of the Advances you make. I believe she has had the Prudence to keep her Heart intirely disengaged, because she would otherwise have told me: And is not so mean-spirited, as to be able to return Tyranny and Insult for true Value, when she is properly convinced of it. Whoever has the Happiness (permit me, tho' her Relation, to call it so) to meet with her Favour, will find this her Character; and that it is not owing to the fond Partiality of, Sir,

F 3

Your Friend and Servant.

LETTER LXXIII.

The Answer, supposing the Gentleman is not approved.

SIR,

I HAVE intimated your Request to my Niece, who thinks herself obliged to your good Opinion of her: But begs that you will give over all Thoughts of applying to her on this Subject. She says she can by no means encourage your Address. It is better therefore to know this at first, because it will save her and yourself farther Trouble. I am, Sir,

Your humble Servant.

LETTER LXXIV.

From a respectful Lover to his Mistress.

Dear Madam,

I HAVE long struggled with the most honourable and respectful Passion that ever filled the Heart of Man. I have often try'd to reveal it personally; as often in this way; but never till now could prevail upon my Fears and Doubts. But I can no longer struggle with a Secret that has given me so much Torture to keep, and yet hitherto more, mo nev ture ing Wh myf ness Lov Paffi with ceffa that or fin veren my fi ligns proac fition Fortu the T Madai one fa and ho you of.

You

my hu

you; a

IF M furel my own Quality can ther more, when I have endeavoured to reveal it. never entertain the Hope to see you, without Rapture; but when I have that Pleasure, instead of being animated as I ought, I am utterly confounded. What can this be owing to, but a Diffidence in myself, and an exalted Opinion of your Worthiness? And is not this one strong Token of ardent Love? Yet if it be, how various is the tormenting Paffion in its Operations! Since some it inspires with Courage, while others it deprives of all necellary Confidence. I can only affure you, Madam, that the Heart of Man never conceived a stronger or fincerer Passion than mine for you. If my Reverence for you is my Crime, I am fure it has been my sufficient Punishment. I need not say my Defigns and Motives are honourable: Who dare approach so much virtuous Excellence, with a Suppofition that such an Assurance is necessary? What my Fortune is, is well known, and I am ready to stand the Test of the strictest Inquiry. Condescend, Madam, to embolden my respectful Passion, by one favourable Line; that if what I here profess, and hope further to have an Opportunity to affure you of, be found to be unquestionable Truth, then my humble Address will not quite be unacceptable to you; and thus you will for ever oblige, dear Madam,

Your affectionate Admirer, and devoted Servant.

LETTER LXXV.

The Answer.

SIR.

1

IF Modesty be the greatest Glory of our Sex, surely it cannot be blameworthy in yours. For my own part, I must think it the most amiable Quality either Man or Woman can posses. Nor can there be, in my Opinion, a true Respect, where there is not a Diffidence of one's own Merit, and an high Opinion of the Person's we esteem.

To fay more, on this Occasion, would little become me. To fay less, would look as if I knew not how to pay that Regard to modest Merit, which modest Merit only deserves.

You, Sir, best know your own Heart; and if you are fincere and generous, will receive as you ought, this Frankness from

Your humble Servant.

LETTER LXXVI.

A humorous Epistle of neighbourly Occurrences and News, to a Bottle-Companion abroad.

Dear Bob,

AM glad to hear you're in the Land of the Living still. You expect from me an Account of what has happen'd among your old Acquaintance fince you have been abroad. I will give it you, and, bating that two or three Years always make vaft Alterations in mature Life, you would be furpris'd at the Havock and Changes that small Space of Time has made in the Circle of our Acquaintance. To begin then with myself: I have had the Missortune to lose my Son Jo; and my Daughter Judy is marry'd, and has brought me another Jo. Kidd of the Fountain, where we kept our Club, has lost his Wife, who was a special Bar-keeper, got his Maid Prisc. with Child----you remember the Slut, by her mincing Airs---marry'd her, and is broke: But not till he had, with his horrid Stum, poison'd half the Society. We began to complain of his Wine, you know, before you left us; and I told him he should let us have Neat, who drank our Gallons,

Walefs dra fwa the oth

to to was the him

recti

at la

on

Cui

an A tho' the amount kick Jaun

he w

of the Punfil War Sykes Monreme

geon to and to Roun handi

and if

Gallons, if he was honest to himself; and, if he was to regard Conscience as well as Interest, must do less Harm by dispensing his Rats-bane to those who drank Pints, than to those honest Fellows who swallow'd Gallons, and, in so handsome a Dose of the one, must take a too large Quantity of the other: But the Dog was incorrigible; for he went on brewing and poisoning, till he kill'd his best Customers; and then what could he expect?

Why, what follow'd; for, truly, Bob, we began to tumble like rotten Sheep. As thus: The Dance was begun by that feafon'd Sinner Tim. Brackley, the Half-pint Man, who was always fotting by himself, with his Whets in the Morning, his Correctives after Dinner, and Digesters at Night, and at last tipp'd off of one of the Kitchen-benches in an Apoplexy. 'Tis true he was not of our Club; tho' we might have taken Warning by his Fall, as the Saying is; but were above it. So the Rot got among us; and first, honest laughing Jack Adams kick'd up of a Fever. Tom Dandy fell into a Jaundice and Dropfy, and when his Doctors faid he was mending, flipp'd thro' their Fingers, in spite of their Art and Affurance. Roger Harman, the Punster, then tipp'd off the Perch, after very little Warning: And was follow'd in a Week by Arthur Sykes. Ralph Atkyns bid us Good-b'ye in a few Months after him. And Ben. Tomlyns, who, you remember, would never go home fober, tumbled down Stairs, and broke his Collar-bone. His Surgeon took him first, a Fever next, then his Doctor; and then, as it were of course, Death: A natural Round enough, you'll fay, Bob. His Widow made a handsome Burial for poor Ben.; took on grievously, and in Five Weeks married her Journeyman. Jemmy Hawkins was a long time ailing, yet would not leave off; so he dy'd, as one may say, of a more natural:

f

S

11

natural Death. Ralph Rawlins fell fick, after a large Dose; and had so narrow an Escape, that he was frighten'd into a Regimen; and now drinks Affes Milk of another Complexion than that which gave him his Malady; and between Physick and the Hyp, ferves for a Memento mori to others, and neither lives nor dies himself. While honest Capt. Tinker, who was deep gone in a Consumption, is in very little better Case: And if any thing saves him, and me, and the rest of our once numerous Society, it will be the Bankruptcy of our worthy Landlord; for that has quite broke us up.

ar

ho

T

H

th hu

H exc He

Par

by .

grea

whi

ction

ther

be f the e

For

Side. The

The

my c

Trut

much

the ( off, i

the t

on, a

Witho

Paper

other

and a

So much for the Club, Bob. Now to the Neighbourhood about us, that you and I knew next best.

Ferry Fenkyns, the prim Mercer, has had a Statute taken out against him, and 5 s. in the Pound is all the Refult of his pragmatical Fluttering. Dan. Pocock the Draper has had an Estate left him, and quitted Bufiness: While Sam. Simpson the Grocer has loft one in Law, and gone mad upon it. See, Bob, the Ups and Downs of this transitory State! Harry Barlow the Turky Merchant has left off to his Nephew, and now pines for want of Employment. Joshua Williams the Cheesemonger, a strange projecting Fellow, you know! is carried out of his Shop into a Sponging-House by his own Maggots. John Jones the Organist is married to Sykes's Daughter Peggy, who proves an arrant Shrew, and has broke about his Head his best Cremona Fiddle, in the Sight of half a dozen Neigh-The Wife of Job Johnson, our Swordcutler, has elop'd from him. You know they always liv'd like Dog and Cat. Paul Lane's Daugh. ter Poll has had a Bastard by 'Squire Wilson's Coachman; and the 'Squire's own Daughter Miss Nelly has run away with her Father's Postilion. Dick Jenkyns, that vile Rake and Beau, is turn'd Quaker;

Quaker; and that still greater Libertine, Peter Mottram, Methodist: While old Satan, to make up his Loss in these two, has subdued Will Wigley, and Tom Allen, who you know used to be very hopeful young Fellows, and are now Rakes of the Town. Tony Williams I had like to have forgot. He has cheated all our Expectations, having escaped the Gallows, and dy'd a natural Death, after a hundred Rogueries, every one of which deserved Hanging.

Parson Matthews goes on preaching and living excellently, and has still as many Admirers as Hearers, but no Preferment: While old clumsy Parson Dromedary is made a Dean, and has Hopes, by his Sister's means, who is a Favourite of a certain great Man, to be a Bishop.

d

As to News of a publick Nature, the Papers, which no doubt you fee, in the monthly Collections at least, will inform you best of that. them however you'll find very little Judgment to be form'd of our Affairs, or our Ministers, as to the one being, or the other doing, right or wrong. For while some are made as black as Devils on one Side, they are made as white as Angels on the other. They never did one good thing, fays the Enemy. They never did one bad one, fays the Friend. For my own part, I think, confidering the undoubted Truth of the Maxim Humanum est errare, and how much easier it is to find a Fault than to mend one, the Gentlemen in the Administration will be well off, if the Publick will middle the Matter between the two Extremes. Mean time one Side goes on, accusing without Mercy; the other acquitting without Shame. 'Tis the Business of one Set of Papers to bespatter and throw Dirt; and of the other to follow after them, with a Scrubbing-brush and a Dishelout: And after all --- the one bedaubs F 6 that, let me be hang'd, Bob, if I'd appear on 'Change with the Coat on my Back that a certain great Man stalks about in, without Concern, when these Dawbers and Scowerers have done their worst and their best upon it. But 'tis a great Matter to be used to such a Coat. And a great Happiness, I'll warrant, your Namesake thinks it, that with all this Rubbing and Scrubbing, it does not appear threadbare yet, after twenty Years Wear, and a hundred People trying to pick Holes in it.

But I have done with my News, and my Politicks, in which I was ever but a Dabbler; and having written a terrible long Letter, and given you, as it were, the World in Miniature, think it time to close it; which I shall do with wishing, that now our poisoning Landlord Kidd is broke and gone, you were among us your old Friends now-and-then, to enliven us with your chearful Pipe, as you used to do in the Days of yore, when we were all alive and merry. And with this hearty Wish, I conclude myfelf, dear Bob,

Your old Bottle-Companion, and humble Servant.

LETTER LXXVII.

From a Nephew to his Aunt, on his flow Progress in a Courtship Affair.

Dear Aunt,

I HAVE made my Addresses, in the best manner I can, to Miss Dawley, but have not the least Room to boast of my Success: The Account you gave me of her good Sense, and many uncommon Qualifications, will not permit me to arraign her her ento blan ders fay; thin first thou enco spok did, put of a go of n laid, I had

I had T ceive refun Maio fix V my B that I lary. not b Ipoke would next thould hope the r demo tempt as the upon When

that,

her Conduct; and the good Opinion I have long entertained of myfelf, makes me very flow in blaming my own. I would have obey'd your Orders to write to you fooner, but knew not what to fay; and by waiting till I began to fear you would think me negligent, I am in no better Condition. I first declared my Regard for her in a manner I thought most suitable for that Purpose. She very encouragingly made me no Answer; and when I spoke again upon the Subject, she ask'd how you did, and was glad to hear you were well. Being put out of my Play, I talk'd of indifferent Things a good while, and at last fell again upon the Reason of my attending her. She order'd the Cloth to be laid, and complaifantly hoped I would flay Supper.

I had no more Opportunity for that time.

Two Days after, I repeated my Visit. ceived me at first politely; but when I began to refume the Subject I came upon, the rung for the Maid, and bad her put on the Tea-kettle. About fix Visits passed before I could obtain one Word to my Bufiness: And the first Thing she answer'd upon that Head was, That Length of Time was necesfary to the making of an Acquaintance that must not be either blushed at, or repented of: This she spoke with such an Air of Gravity, as put what I would have reply'd, quite out of my Head. Yet next Visit I began again. I told her how happy I should think myself, if I could be encouraged to hope for the smallest Share of her Favour. But the made me fuch an odd Answer, as plainly demonstrated to me, that I had more of her Contempt than Approbation. This made me as earnest as she, to wave the Subject; and so we went on upon the Weather, for a whole Week before; and when we had done that, we talk'd Politicks: So that, in short, after Two Months Study how to accomplish

he nt n-

gn er

accomplish the Happiness you pointed out for me, I find myself not one single Step advanced; for when I see her now, we both talk with seeming Satisfaction, on any Subject where Love has no Part: But when that is introduced, all her easy Eloquence sinks into Reserve.

I would not determine to give up my Address, before I had your farther Advice: In Hopes of which I am, Honoured Madam,

Your dutiful Nephew.

LETTER LXXVIII.

The Aunt's Answer, encouraging him to persevere.

Nephew Robert,

I Thought you had been better acquainted with the Art of Love, than to be so easily out of Heart. That such a Lady as Miss Dawley has not forbid your Visits, let me tell you, is Encouragement as much as you ought to expect. She is a Lady of fine Sense, and has had the Advantage of as fine an Education; and you must not expect a Lady of her Prudence and Merit, will be won by general Compliments; or that her Affection will be mov'd by the Notion of a fudden and precipitate Paffion. Her Judgment must be first touch'd; for she views Marriage as a ferious Thing: By it her Mother was made happy, and her Sifter undone. I injoin the Continuation of your Addresses; for a more deserving Lady than Miss, does not live. And be fure, at least, to be more ambitious of appearing a Man of Sense, than a Lover. When the latter is accepted on account of the former, the Lady does doe hav if i a fi mal

_

Cor

Mo

AG

De I Re Wilde If this Paffio in you not ti Having prefun this w your] believe try by prevail to atte good S above th which P

You are

were, g

does Credit to her Choice. You young Fellows have such Notions of a Nine-days Courtship, that if it were indulged by all Women, none would, in a short time, be thought obliging, who did not make Modesty submit to Passion, and Discretion to Compliment. I desire to hear from you again a Month hence; and am, in the mean time,

Your affectionate Aunt.

LETTER LXXIX.

A Gentleman to a Lady, professing an Aversion to the tedious Forms of Courtship.

Dear Madam,

0

h

of

ot

e-

of 1 2

by

be af-

he 0-

ina nd

ing

ter

oes

Remember that one of the Antients, in defcribing a Youth in Love, fays, he has neither Wisdom enough to speak, nor to hold his Tongue. If this be a just Description, the Sincerity of my Paffion will admit of no Dispute: And whenever, in your Company, I behave like a Fool, forget not that you are answerable for my Incapacity. Having made bold to declare thus much, I must prefume to fay, that a favourable Reception of this will, I am certain, make me more worthy your Notice; but your Disdain would be what I believe myself incapable ever to surmount. try by idle Fallacies, and airy Compliments, to prevail on your Judgment, is a Folly for any Man to attempt who knows you. No, Madam, your good Sense and Endowments have raised you far above the Necessity of practising the mean Artifices which prevail upon the less deserving of your Sex: You are not to be so lightly deceived; and if you were, give me leave to fay, I should not think you deferving deferving of the Trouble that would attend fuch an Attempt.

This, I must own, is no fashionable Letter from one who, I am sure, loves up to the greatest Hero of Romance: But as I would hope, that the Happiness I sue for, should be lasting, it is certainly most eligible to take no Step to procure it but what will bear Reslection; for I should be happy to see you mine, when we have both out-lived the Taste for every thing that has not Virtue and Reason to support it. I am, Madam, notwithstanding this unpolished Address,

Your most respectful Admirer, and obedient Servant,

LETTER LXXX.

The Lady's Answer, encouraging a farther Declaration.

SIR,

I AM very little in Love with the fashionable Methods of Courtship: Sincerity with me is preferable to Compliments; yet I see no Reason why common Decency should be discarded. There is something so odd in your Style, that when I know whether you are in Jest or Earnest, I shall be less at a Loss to answer you. Mean time, as there is abundant Room for rising, rather than sinking, in your Complaisance, you may possibly have chosen wisely to begin first at the lowest End. If this be the Case, I know not what your succeeding Addresses may produce: But I tell you fairly, that your present make no great Impression, yet perhaps as much as you intended, on Your bumble Servant.

LET-

The

clare Hon for Dan to t

gin a who lefs a a few And to er just a fions, the I dear I

Be

C

LETTER LXXXI.

The Gentleman's Reply, more explicitly avowing his Passion.

Dearest Madam,

7

le

18 n

re

W

is in en

be

dat ps

Γ-

NOW I have the Hope of being not more despised for my acknowleged Affection, I declare to you, with all the Sincerity of a Man of Honour, that I have long had a most fincere Passion for you; but I have feen Gentlemen led fuch Dances, when they have given up their Affections to the lovely Tyrants of their Hearts, and could not help themselves, that I had no Courage to begin an Address in the usual Forms, even to you, of whose good Sense and Generosity I had nevertheless a great Opinion. You have favoured me with a few Lines, which I most humbly thank you for. And I do affure you, Madam, if you will be pleas'd to encourage my humble Suit, you shall have so just an Account of my Circumstances and Pretensions, as I hope will intitle me to your Favour in the honourable Light, in which I profess myself, dear Madam,

Your most obliged and faithful Admirer.

Be so good as to favour me with one Line more, to encourage my personal Attendance, if not disagreeable.

LETTER LXXXII.

The Lady's Answer to his Reply, putting the Matter on a sudden Issue.

SIR,

A S we are both so well inclined to avoid unneceffary Trouble, as well as unneceffary Compliments, I think proper to acquaint you, That Mr. Johnson, of Pallmall, has the Management of all my Affairs; and is a Man of fuch Probity and Honour, that I do nothing in any Matters without him. I have no Dislike to your Person; and if you approve of what Mr. Johnson can acquaint you with, in relation to me, and I approve of his Report in your Favour, I shall be far from shewing any Gentleman, that I have either an infolent or a fordid Spirit, especially to such as do me the Honour of their good Opinion. I am, Sir,

Your humble Servant.

LXXXIII. LETTER

A facetious young Lady to her Aunt, ridiculing ber serious Lover.

Dear Aunt,

I AM much obliged to you for the Kindness you intended me, in recommending Mr. Leadbeater to me for a Hufband: But I must be so free as to tell you, he is a Man no way fuited to my Inclination. I despise, 'tis true, the idle Rants of Romance; but am inclinable to think there may be an Extreme on the other Side of the Question.

T in the was with that i I imr could to yo Fireinto l Fire, Coat, about Twel ney, I hope Finge. thuffle or thr Ih juft r you er go to dam, The I one tr

> upon Commi

Subjec Discou

a bad kettle

of the

gious !

had pu

At

The first time the honest Man came to see me, in the way you were pleased to put into his Head, was one Sunday after Sermon-time: He began with telling me, what I found at my Fingers-ends, that it was very cold; and politely blow'd upon his. I immediately perceived, that his Passion for me could not keep him warm; and, in Complaisance to your Recommendation, conducted him to the Fire-fide. After he had pretty well rubbed Heat into his Hands, he stood up with his Back to the Fire, and with his Hand behind him, held up his Coat, that he might be warm all over; and, looking about him, asked with the Tranquillity of a Man a Twelve-month married, and just come off a Journey, How all Friends did in the Country? I faid, I hoped, very well; but would be glad to warm my Fingers. Cry Mercy, Madam !--- And then he shuffled a little further from the Fire, and after two or three Hems, and a long Paufe----

I have heard, said he, a most excellent Sermon just now: Dr. Thomas is a fine Man truly: Did you ever hear him, Madam? No, Sir, I generally go to my own Parish-church. That's right, Madam, to be sure: What was your Subject to-day? The Pharisee and the Publican, Sir. A very good one truly; Dr. Thomas would have made fine Work upon that Subject. His Text to-day was, Evil Communications corrupt good Manners. A good Subject, Sir; I doubt not the Doctor made a fine Discourse upon it. O, ay, Madam, he can't make a bad one upon any Subject. I rung for the Teakettle; for, thought I, we shall have all the Heads of the Sermon immediately.

at

of d

it.

if 1t

t.

u

to 1-

)-

At Tea he gave me an Account of all the religious Societies, unask'd; and how many Boys they had put out 'Prentices, and Girls they had taught to knit, knit, and fing Psalms. To all which I gave a Nod of Approbation, and was just able to say (for I began to be horribly in the Vapours), It was a very excellent Charity. O, ay, Madam, said he again (for that's his Word, I find), a very excellent one truly; it is snatching so many Brands out of the Fire. You are a Contributor, Sir, I doubt not. O, ay, Madam, to be sure; every good Man would contribute to such a worthy Charity, to be sure. No doubt, Sir, a Blessing attends upon all who promote so worthy a Design. O, ay, Madam, no doubt, as you say: I am sure I have sound it; blessed be God! And then he twang'd his Nose, and listed up his Eyes, as if in an Ejaculation.

O, my good Aunt, what a Man is here for a Husband! At last came the happy Moment of his taking Leave; for I would not ask him to stay Supper: And moreover, he talk'd of going to a Lecture at St. Helen's. And then (tho' I had an Opportunity of saying little more than Yes, and No, all the Time; for he took the Vapours he had put me into, for Devotion, or Gravity at least, I believe) he press'd my Hand, look'd frightfully kind, and gave me to understand, as a Mark of his Favour, that if, upon further Conversation, and Inquiry into my Character, he should happen to like me as well as he did from my Behaviour and Person; why, truly, I need not fear, in time, being blessed with him for my Husband!

This, my good Aunt, may be a mighty fafe way of travelling toward the Land of Matrimony, as far as I know; but I cannot help wishing for a little more Entertainment on our Journey. I am willing to believe Mr. Leadbeater an honest Man, but am, at the same time, afraid his religious Turn of Temper, however in itself commendable, would better

fuit lemn

Her

I All abl Man; make band, mily; of Rick would he talk

And we that the pression His Twhich yeard from feems;

the Sub

s a kin had a l make a hoor Bo

Pfalms, Ridicule most Important Occasions. 117

suit with a Woman who centres all Desert in a solemn Appearance, than with, dear Aunt,

Your greatly obliged Kinswoman.

LETTER LXXXIV.

Her Aunt's Answer, reprehending her ludicrous Turn of Mind.

Cousin Jenny,

d

1;

ate

ot,

fo

be ba ra

his 1b-

e-

)p-

Vo,

put

bend,

Fa-

In-

like

Per-

eing

way

s far ittle

ling

am,

emetter

fuit

I AM forry you think Mr. Leadbeater so unsuitable a Lover. He is a serious, sober, good Man; and surely when Seriousness and Sobriety make a necessary Part of the Duty of a good Husband, a good Father, and good Master of a Family; those Characters should not be the Subjects of Ridicule, in Persons of our Sex especially, who would reap the greatest Advantage from them. But the talks of the Weather when he first sees you, it seems; and would you have him directly fall upon the Subject of Love, the Moment he beheld you?

He visited you just after Sermon, on a Sunday:
And was it so unsuitable for him to let you see, that the Duty of the Day had made proper Impressions upon him?

His Turn for promoting the Religious Societies, which you speak so slightly of, deserves more Regard from every good Person; for that same Turn is a kind of Security to a Woman, that he who had a benevolent and religious Heart, could not make a bad Man, or a bad Husband. To put out moor Boys to 'Prentice, to teach Girls to sing Psalms, would be with very sew a Subject for Ridicule; for he that was so willing to provide for the Children of others, would take still greater Care of his own.

A

He gave you to understand, that if he liked your Character on Inquiry, as well as your Person and Behaviour, he should think himself very happy in such a Wise; for that, I dare say, was more like his Language, than that you put in his Mouth. And, let me tell you, it would have been a much stranger Speech, had so cautious and serious a Man said, without a thorough Knowlege of your Character, that at the first Sight he was over Head and Ears in Love with you.

I think, allowing for the ridiculous Turn your airy Wit gives to this his first Visit, that, by your own Account, he acted like a prudent, a serious, and a worthy Man, as he is, and as one that thought slashy Compliments beneath him, in so serious an Affair as this.

I think, Cousin Jenny, this is not only a mighty fase Way, as you call it, of travelling toward the Land of Matrimony, but to the Land of Happiness, with respect as well to the next World as this. And it is to be hoped, that the better Entertainment you so much wish for, on your Journey, may not lead you too much out of your Way, and divert your Mind from the principal View which you ought to have to your Journey's End.

In short, I could rather have wish'd, that you could bring your Mind nearer to his Standard, than that he should bring down his to your Level. And you'd have found more Satisfaction in it than you imagine, could you have brought yourself to a little more of that folemn Appearance, which you treat so lightly, and which, I think, in him, is much more than mere Appearance.

Upon the Whole, Cousin Jenny, I am forry, that a Woman of Virtue and Morals, as you are, should sho of rare I ar duo Mr.

pose

than

From

M RE. D fif the fin her Ch Mann henfive Advan of you viour re ners. I upon N fended: to glory ick Ad elf to a and this eave th

who has

Madam,

should treat so ludicrously a serious and pious Frame of Mind, in an Age, wherein good Examples are so rare, and so much wanted; tho' at the same time I am far from offering to prescribe to you in so arduous an Affair as a Husband; and wish you and Mr. Leadbeater too, since you are so differently disposed, matched more suitably to each other's Mind, than you are likely to be together: For I am

Your truly affectionate Aunt.

LETTER LXXXV.

From a Gentleman to his Mistress, resenting her supposed Coquetry.

MADAM,

n

e

h

a-

TUC

luc

us, ght

an hty

the res,

And

you

lead

your

ht to

you

than

And

1 you a lit-treat

more

forry,

u are,

hould

DEAUTY has Charms which are not eafily re-D fisted; but it is, I presume, in the Power of the finest Woman breathing, to counterbalance all her Charms by a Conduct unworthy of them. This Manner of speaking, Madam, is what I am apprehensive you have not been enough used to: The Advantages you possess, independently of any Act of your own, cannot be any Warrant for a Behaviour repugnant to Honour, and strict good Manners. I ventured to address myself to you, Madam, upon Motives truly honourable, and best to be defended; but fuffer me to fay, that I never proposed to glory in adding one to the Number of your pubick Admirers, or to be so tame, as to subject myelf to any Usage. And if this be your Intention, and this only, I shall still admire you; but must eave the Flattering of your Vanity to Gentlemen who have more Leifure, and less Sincerity, than, Madam,

> Your most obedient Servant. L E T-

LETTER LXXXVI.

The Lady's angry Answer.

SIR,

BY the Letter I just now received from you, I fanfy you have been a little too hasty, as well as too free, in your Conjectures about my Conduct. I hope it is fuch, and will be always fuch, as shall justify me to Persons of Honour of my own Sex, as well as yours. You have furely, Sir, a Right to act as you please; and (at present, however) fo have I. How long I should have this Liberty, were I at your Mercy, this Letter of yours gives me a most desirable and seasonable Intimation.

For Goodness sake, Sir, let me do as I think proper: I fee, you will. I fent not for you, nor asked you to be one of the Number you mention. And, if you think fit to withdraw your Name from the Lift, can I help it, if I would ever so fain? But could you not do this without refolving to affront me, and to reflect on my Conduct? I am unworthy of your Address: I grant it .---- Then you can forbear it. Perhaps I like to see the young Fellows dying for me; but fince they can do it without impairing their Health, don't be so very angry at me. In short, Sir, you are your own Master; and, Heaven be thank'd, I am, at prefent, my own Mistress; and your well-manner'd Letter will make me refolve to be fo longer than perhaps I had otherwise resolved. You see my Follies in my Conduct: Thank you, Sir, for letting me know you do. I fee your Sex in you Letter: Thank you, Sir, for that too. So being thus call' I wa you temp devoi I faw mine no, I I am ever c Forgiv lue, th a Pena any Fo honest fo devo thousar

1

I am I

flighted

Such T

tell you.

am I al

Madam. and I v thus much obliged to you, in a double respect, can I do otherwise than subscribe myself,

Your thankful Servant?

LETTER LXXXVII.

The Gentleman's submissive Reply.

Dear Madam,

n

a

1-13

of 1-nk

101 on.

m n?

af-

am

hen

ung lo it very own

pre-

ner'd

than

e my

you

peing thus

BEG ten thousand Pardons for my rafh Letter to you. I wish'd, too late, I could have recall'd it. And when I had the Favour of yours, I was under double Concern. But indeed, Madam, you treated me, I thought, too lightly; and Contempt is intolerable where a Mind is fo fincerely devoted. I never faw a Lady I could love before I saw you. I never shall see another I wish to be mine; and as I must love you whether I will or no, I hope you'll forgive my foolish Petulance. I am fure it was inspired by Motives, that, however culpable in their Effects, are intitled to your Forgiveness, as to the Cause. I cannot meanly sue, tho' to you. Don't let me undergo too heavy a Penance for my Rashness. You can mould me to any Form you please. But, dear Lady, let not my honest Heart suffer the more Torture, because it is 10 devotedly at your Service. Once again, I ask a thousand Pardons .--- What can I say more?--- I own I am hasty; but 'tis most when I think myself fighted, or used contemptuously, by those I love. Such Tempers, Madam, are not the worst, let me tell you. And tho' I may be too ready to offend, yet am I always as ready to repent. And, dear, good Madam, let me be receiv'd to Favour this once, and I will be more cautious for the future. For

I am, and ever must be, whether you'll allow it or not,

Your most devoted Admirer, and humble Servant.

LETTER LXXXVIII.

The Lady's forgiving Return.

SIR,

Cannot help answering your Letter, because you feem fensible of your Fault. If your Temperis fo captious, your Guard against it should be the stronger. It is no very comfortable View, let me tell you, that one fees a Person who wants to recommend himself to one's Friendship, so ready to take Fire. What has a Woman to do in common Discretion, but to avoid, while she can, a Prospect fo unpleasing? For if the knows the cannot bear difreputable Imputations, as indeed she ought not; and that the Gentleman is not able to contain himfelf, whenever he is pleafed to be moved, from giving them; why this, truly, affords a most comfortable Appearance of a happy Life! However, Sir, I cannot bear Malice for a first Fault, tho' yet it looks like a Temper, even in a Friend, that one would rather fear than love. But if it be never repeated, at least till I give such Reasons for it, that neither Charity, nor a professed Esteem, can excuse, I shall hope, that what has happen'd may rather be of good than bad Use to us both. But indeed I must say, that if you cannot avoid fuch difagreeable Instances of your Senfibility, it will be Justice to both, now we are both free, to think no more of

Your humble Servant.

LET-

it

M rea in nor

Eve

peri

coul

ftood

the r drink

and ,

drink

raifed

despis

mothe

fence;

honest

Confid

pleased mortify

If the Favour

In

LETTER LXXXIX.

Ridiculing a romantick Rhapsody in Courtship:

SIR,

e

16

e-

to

on et ear

ot;

m-

IVort-

r, I

ooks

ould

ated,

ither

fhall good

t fay, ances

now

rvant.

ET.

Y Niece defires me to acquaint you, that she M received your celestial Epistle last Night, as we were all fitting down to Supper; and she leaves it to me to answer it, according to the Effects it has produced. You must know then, that as soon as she had read it, there appear'd a more marvellous Metamorphofis in her Deportment, than any we read of in Ovid. She put on high Airs, and talk'd in a lofty Strain to us, as well as to the Maids; nor knew she how to behave all the rest of the Evening .--- You had fo thoroughly proved her fuperior to all the Deities of the Antients, that she could not help fanfying the homely Viands that flood before her, a Banquet of Paradife; and when she put to her Lips some of our common Tabledrink, it became immediately, in her Fancy, NeEtar and Ambrofia; and the affected to fip, rather than drink. When, by your generous Aid, she had thus raifed herfelf far above Mortality, she began to despise our Company; and thought her Grandmother and me too highly favoured by her Prefence; and spoke to us in such a Tone, as made us honest Mortals amaz'd at her sudden Elevation.

In short, Sir, as she has placed such a thorough Considence in you, as to believe whatever you are pleased to tell her, she begs you will never so far mortify her towering Ambition, as to treat her like any thing earthly.

If then you would make yourfelf worthy of her Favour, you must, in order to support the De-

G 2 fcription

fcription you have given of her, at least dart thro'the Clouds, or rise with the Morning-Goddess, and attend, in her airy Chariot, at her Chamber-window, where, you say, all the Graces wait; so that you will not be displeased with your Company.

Indeed she is under a Concern, which you must supply, for what Kind of Birds you will find to draw her Chariot; for Doves and Peacocks she would scorn to borrow of Venus and Juno, whom you make fo much her Inferiors.

Here she put on a Royal Air: We will conclude Our own Letter Ourself, said she; so, taking Pen in Hand, she writes as underneath.

Don't let me, when the Car is quite in Readiness, be rudely disturb'd: But tell Mercury, I would have him tap softly at my Window. I will rise in all my Glory, whip into my starry Calash, and rush through the Regions of Light, till, despising Mortality, we shall form some new Constellation, which some happy Astrologer may, perhaps, in Honour of us both, style The Twinklers of Moorfields. When I have chosen my new Name, I will deign to write it; till when, I can only style myself, most obligeing Sir,

Your Celestial, &c.

LETTER XC.

Against a young Lady's affecting manly Airs; and also censuring the modern Riding-habits.

Dear Betfey,

THE Improvement that is visible in your Perfon, fince your going to Bury, gives me much Pleasure; and the Dawning of fine Sense, and a good

yo

Bu Bu

wha

ca

instituch wou your ther tingu

that a dent foft, t In th

Liken you a a Cha I a in Cobold,

good Judgment, that discovers itself in your Conversation, makes me hope to see every Persection of my Sifter, your late excellent Mother, revived in you.

Yet one thing the Duty of a tender Uncle obliges me to blame in you; and that is, a certain Affectation that of late obtains in your Behaviour, of imitating the Manners of the other Sex, and appearing more masculine than either the amiable Softness of your Person or Sex can justify.

I have been particularly offended, let me tell you, my Dear, at your new Riding-habit; which is made fo extravagantly in the Mode, that one cannot eafily diftinguish your Sex by it. For you neither look like a modest Girl in it, nor an agreeable

Some Conformity to the Fashion is allowable. But a cock'd Hat, a lac'd Jacket, a Fop's Peruke, what strange Metamorphoses do they make! And then the Air assumed with them, so pert, and so instipid, at the same time, makes, upon the Whole, such a Boy-girl Figure, that I know of nothing that would become either the Air, or the Dress, but a young Italian Singer. For fuch an one, being neither Man nor Woman, would possibly be best distinguished by this Hermaphrodite Appearance.

In short, I would have you remember, my Dear, that as fure as any thing intrepid, free, and in a prudent Degree bold, becomes a Man; so whatever is loft, tender, and modest, renders your Sex amiable. In this one Instance we do not prefer our own Likeness; and the less you resemble us, the more you are fure to charm: For a masculine Woman is a Character as little creditable as becoming.

I am no Enemy to a proper Presence of Mind in Company; but would never have you appear bold, talkative, or assured. Modesty in the outward

G 3

Behaviour,

u le n

d ıld in ish

-10 ich our nen rite ige-

&c.

lirs;

Permuch and a good

Behaviour, is a strong Prepossession in a Lady's Favour; and, without it, all your Persections will be of little Service, either as to Reputation or Preserment. You want not Sense: And, I hope, will take kindly these well-intended Hints from

Your affectionate Uncle.

LETTER XCI.

Letter of a Father to a Daughter, relating to Three Persons of different Characters proposed to him, each for her Husband: With his Recommendation of one in Years.

Dear Polly,

I HAVE three feveral Proposals made me on your Account; and they are so particularly circumstanced, that I cannot approve of one of them.

The first is by Mr. Aldridge, for his Son John, who, you know, is very weak in his Intellects, and fo apt to be misled, that he wants a Guardian for him in a Wife, and fo does you the Reputation to think you a proper Person for that Office. But I think the worst Weakness in the World in a Husband is, that of Intellect; and I should suffer much to have you linked to a Man who has no Head, and is, for that Reason, highly unworthy to be yours. A foolish Wife is much more tolerable, because she can be kept up; but a foolish Husband will do what he pleases, and go where he pleases; and tho' he knew nothing elfe, will think he knows too much to be controuled by his Wife; and will have this Lesson taught him by Rakes and Libertines, neal

th fro

ti

wh who of

Co Ra bet faw plic

is as mile fent ture

me, him a to fired

my .

may important for vi

any

again that is Frien tines, when he is capable of no other. So I did not think it necessary so much as to consult you about him.

The second is from Mr. Gough, for his Son Richard, who has run thro' such a Course of Libertinism, that he has hardly his Fellow, and has neither a found Head, nor a found Body; and is so far from being reclaim'd, that his Father proposes a Wise, as the last Hope, for him; and yet knows not whether he will accept of one, if one can be found that would venture upon him: So I could not think of suffering my Daughter to stand either to the Courtesy, or lie at the Mercy, of so prosligate a Rake: Tho', it seems, he wouch safes to like you better, as his Father says, than any one he ever saw; which was the Reason of the old Man's Application to me.

The third was from Mr. Tomkins, whose Nephew is as bad a Sot, as the other is a Rake; but who promises to reform, if his Uncle can procure my Confent and yours. But as you had refused his Overtures when made to your felf, without consulting me, and for the very Reasons I should have rejected him, I would not trouble you about him; but gave a total Denial to the Request of his Uncle, who desired that the Matter might be brought on again, by my Authority and Interpolition.

So, my good Girl has had hard Fortune, as one may fay, in the Offers of three Persons, that it is impossible she should chuse out of: One so very a Fool, a second so profligate a Rake, and the third so vile a Sot, that there could be no Thought of any of the three.

n

Of

n,

id

or

to

I

If-

ch

do

be.

ne-

nd

S;

WS

ill

7-

35,

But I have a fourth Affair to mention to you, against which there can lie but one Objection; and that is, some Disparity in Years. This is my good Friend Mr. Rowe; as honest a Man as ever liv'd;

G 4

a Man of Prudence; a Man of good Fortune, and easy Circumstance; Master of a genteel House and Business; well respected by all the World, and most by those who know him best; a good-natur'd Man, humane, compassionate, and, tho' frugal, not a Niggard.

Now, my dear Daughter, What think you of Mr. Rowe?---He has an high Opinion of your Prudence and Discretion; but wishes himself, that you were either Ten Years older, or he Ten Years younger.---Yet he thinks, if you can get over that Point, he could make you one of the fondest of Husbands, and that there is not any thing but he could and would oblige you in.

I too, my Dear, wish there was a nearer Agreement in Years; yet, considering the Hazards a young Woman runs, as the World goes, from Rakes, Sots, and Fools, of every Degree; considering that in this Matter, there is but one only thing to be wish'd for; and that all the grand Defirables of Life will be so well supply'd; considering too that he is a fightly, a neat, a personable Man, and has good Health, good Spirits, and good Humour; and is not yet got quite at the Top of the Hill of Life; considering all these Things, I say, I think that one Consideration might be given up for the many other more material ones, which would be so well supply'd in this Match.

Say, my dear Daughter, fay freely, what you think. You'll much oblige me, if you can get this Matter over. But if you cannot (and be so happy as I wish you),----why then----I don't know what to say---But I must---I think---acquiesce. But yet, I could once more wish---But I will say no more till I have your Answer, but that I am

Your most indulgent Father.

ar

be

m tic

cen

Ti

Lig

Lik

mo

and

Agr

on ( fides

Def

alwa

to fp

high know

Y

LETTER XCII.

Her Answer, dutifully expostulating on the Case.

Honoured Sir,

1-14 rs

at of ie

6-a m fi-

ly

)eer-

ble

od

up uld

you this

ppy

jet,

ore

her.

T.

I AM fensible of the Obligations which both Nature and Gratitude lay me under to obey your Commands; and am willing to do so at all Events, if what I have to offer be not thought sufficient to excuse my Compliance.

Mr. Rowe is, I believe, possessed of all the Merit you ascribe to him. But be not displeas'd, dear Sir, when I say, that he seems not so proper an Husband for me, as for a Woman of more Years and Experience.

His advanced Years, give me Leave to say, will be far from being agreeable to me; and will not my Youth, or at least the Effects of it, in some Particulars, be distasteful to him? Will not that innocent Levity, which is almost inseparable from my Time of Life, appear to him in a more despisable Light, than perhaps it deserves? For, Sir, is not a Likeness of Years attended with a Likeness of Humours, an Agreement in Diversions and Pleasures, and Thinking too? And can such Likenesses, such Agreements, be naturally expected, where the Years on one Side double the Number of the other? Besides, Sir, is not this Desect, if I may so call it, a Desect that will be far from mending by Time?

Your great Goodness, and the Tenderness I have always experienc'd from you, have embolden'd me to speak thus freely upon a Concern that is of the highest Importance to my future Welfare, which I know you have in View from more solid Motives than I am capable of entertaining. And if you still insist upon my Obedience, I will only take the Liberty to observe, that if I do marry Mr. Rowe, it will be intirely the Effect of my Duty to the best of Fathers, and not of an Affection for a Gentleman that I respect in every other Light but that you propose him in. And, dear good Sir, consider then, what Misunderstandings and evil Consequences may possibly arise from hence, and render unhappy the suture Life of Your most dutiful Daughter.

G

infift

I am greatly obliged to you, Sir, that you refufed, without confulting me, the three strange Overtures you mention.

LETTER XCIII.

His Reply, urgently inforcing, but not compelling, her Compliance with his Desire.

Dear Polly,

I AM far from taking amis what you have written, in Answer to my Recommendation of my worthy Friend Mr. Rowe; and I am sure, if I was to shew him your Letter, he would never permit you to be urged more on this Head. But, my Dear, I own my Wishes and my Heart are engaged in his, shall I say, or in your own Favour? And I would hope, that, notwithstanding all you have written, your good Sense, and that Discretion for which you have been hitherto so deservedly noted, may, on mature Resection, enable you to overcome the Objection that would be insuperable to lighter and airier Minds of your Sex.

YC

it

fo

fee

I

ha

yo

Such is the Profligateness of the Generality of young Fellows of the present Age, that I own I look into the World with Affrightment, at the Risques which a virtuous young Woman has to encounter with on a Change of Condition, which makes me dwell upon the Point with the greater Earnestness. And you know, my Dear, I can have no Motive but your Good.

it

st

eat

eer

7.

11-

it-

ny ras

nit

ny

d I

ive

for

d, ne

ter

Then, Child, consider the Reputation this Match, to all who know Mr. Rowe's Worth, will bring to your Prudence, and even to your Sex. For it is as much Credit to a young Lady to marry a worthy Man, older than herself, as it is Discredit for an old Woman to marry a young Man. Does my Polly take my Meaning? The Case is plain. Besides, nobody thinks Ten or Twelve Years Difference in a Man's Age any thing out of the way. So, my Dear, it is not Twenty Years Odds; it is only Ten at most.

Then, again, he is a good-natur'd Man; there's a great deal in that, you know.

To be fure, my Dear, it is my good Opinion of your Prudence, that makes me endeavour to perfuade you to this. And I could be glad, methinks, to find, that I have not too high a Notion of your Discretion, in the Preference I am willing to give it to that of all the young Ladies I know.

But if I am mistaken, I mean, if you cannot get over this one Difficulty, I shall be apt to think, so surmountable does it seem to me, that you have seen somebody you like, and are preposses'd. Yet I cannot believe that neither, because you know I have so tender a Regard for your own Option, that you would have made me acquainted with it.

Yet, after all, far be it from me to compel your Inclinations! But if you should be so happy as to think with me, that the many valuable Qualities

Mr. Rowe is possessed of, are scarcely to be hoped for in a younger Man, as the World now goes, you would make me very happy; and I am persuaded you will never repent your Choice.

One thing more let me urge, my Dear; for you fee how my Heart's upon it. How many very virtuous young Maidens have married, for the fake of Riches only, a Man much older, much more difagreeable, waspish, humoursome, diseased, decrepit, and yet have lived Years without Reproach, and made themselves not unhappy! And will not my dear Daughter do as much to oblige her Father (and where Health, Good-nature, Wisdom, Discretion, and great Circumstances, meet to inforce the Argument), as others would do, where not one of these Advantages are in the Case, except the single Article of Riches? Only then, my Dear, let Mr. Rowe attend you, two or three times, before you absolutely fet yourfelf against him. And, as I hope your Affections are intirely difengaged, you will foon fee whether his Conversation or Proposals will not incline you in his Favour, confidering all things; that is to fay, confidering the one thing AGAINST him, and the many FOR him. And if it cannot be, I will intirely acquiesce, being ever studious of your Happiness, as becomes

Your indulgent Father.

ar

fu

ni

he is w of w th

LETTER XCIV.

To a rich Widow Lady with Children, diffuading her from marrying a Widower of meaner Degree, who has Children also.

Dear Madam,

I T is with some Reluctance, and great Respect, that I prevail on myself to give you this Trouble. The frequent Visits Mr. Clarkson makes you, and the Airs that Gentleman gives himself, have given Birth to a Report, that a Treaty of Marriage between you is on foot; and that, in all Probability, it will be soon brought to Effect.

To be fure, Mr. Clarkson is not to be blam'd, to endeavour to procure for his Wife a Lady of your Prudence, good Character, and Fortune; but whether you will be able to avoid the Censure of the World, if you chuse him for a Husband, is another Point, which greatly concerns you to consider of,

and affects me, and all who wish you well.

His Fortune, Madam, is not equal to yours, supposing it to be better than the World reports it: He has Children: So have you. What Inconveniencies may not arise from hence? Especially, as he is not thought to be one of the best and smoothest-temper'd Men in the World.----His Character is not equal, in any respect, to say the least (for I would not detract from any Man's Merit), to that of your late good Spouse, my dear Friend; who would have been much grieved, if he had had but the least Apprehension, that the Man he would not have accompany'd with, should succeed him in his Bed.

Far be it from me, dear Madam, if you are for disposed, as to wish to hinder you from a Change of of Condition with a fuitable Person! But as your late Spouse left his and your Children so much in your Power, methinks you should take especial Care, how and to whom you communicate any Part of that Power, and thereby give a Right to controul not only them, but yourfelf. Must he not be partial to his own Children? And will he not expect, that your Complaifance to him should make you fo too; or, at least, be his Childrens Behaviour what it will, that it shall induce you to put them upon a Par with your own? His Daughters will be Spies upon your Conduct, and, be you ever so kind to them, will always suspect your Partiality to your own, and treat you as their Mother-in-law; and their Father will believe all they shall suggest, for that very Reason, and because he will judge, tho' perhaps not allow for, that you ought to prefer your own to his: And this will be the Source of perpetual Uneasinesses between you. Consider, dear Madam, whether your late affectionate Spouse deferved from you, that his Children and your own should be put upon such Difficulties, in Favour of those of any other Person whatever.

C

be

Y(

ei

W

hu

yo

as

an

Po

be

dr

Pe

CI

the pro

tha

No doubt but you may make your own Conditions with Mr. Clarkson. He will be glad to call you and your Fortune his, upon any Terms: But, confider, Madam, how difficult it may be, whatever Articles you make, for a good Wise, who has been accustom'd to think her Interest the same with that of her Husband, to refuse to his Importunities, and perhaps to his Conveniency, if not Necessities, those Communications of Fortune which you may referve in your own Power, when they will make him easier in Circumstance, and more complaisant in Temper: And how hard it will be to deny a Man any thing, to whom you have given your Person, and to whom you have given your Person, and to whom you have vowed Duty and Obedience.

T

n

al

y

to ot

X-

ce

ur

m

be nd

ur

nd

or 0 ur

)e-ear

le-

un

of di-

ou

n-ver

en

hat

nd

ofe

reke

1718

11

0119

100.

Jus

But if you should have the Resolution to refuse him, what he may not be backward to ask, do you think yourfelf so well able to bear that Indifference, if not worfe, which such a Refusal may occasion? And would you chuse to have Advantage taken of your tenderest Hours, either to induce you to acquiesce with Importunities, which, comply'd with, may hurt your Children; or, to have those tender Moments dash'd with Suspicions of Selfishness and Design? For Prudence will oblige you to be on your Guard, that even the highest Acts of Kindness, and the frongest Professions of Affection, may not be preparative Arts to obtain from you Concessions you ought not to make. And how will the pure Joys which flow from an unsuspected Union of Minds and Interests, the Want whereof will make any Matrimony unhappy, be found in a State thus circumstantiated?

If, Madam, you are bent upon a Change of Condition, your Friends would wish first, that you will be pleased absolutely to ascertain the Fortunes of your Children, according to the Design and Will of their dear Father, as far as may legally be done, either by chusing Trustees for them, or by such other way as shall put it out of a new Husband's Power to hurt them: And when he shall know this is done, you will have a better Testimony of his Affection, as he will know what is, and what is not yours, and can hope for no more, because it is not in your Power to give more. But how much more is it to be wished, for your own sake, as well as your Childrens, that if you do change, it may be with a Person who has no Children? And then what other Children may be the Results of your new Marriage, they will be your own as well as his, and to be more properly intitled to your Care and your Kindness, than any Man's Children by another Wife can be.

By this means, Madam, most of the Uneasinesses we every Day see in Families, where are two Sorts of Children, will be prevented; or perhaps your present Children will be grown up, and out of the way, before the other can interfere essentially with them; or if not, they will be naturalized, as one may say, to each other; and, having the same Mother, who has an equal Interest in them all, will expect and allow for an equal Exertion of Tenderness and Favour to all.

I will trouble you with no more at prefent on this Head; and am confident, that when you confider maturely what I have written, and the respectful Manner in which I have ventur'd to give my Opinion, and my own Disinterestedness besides, and that I might still have urged other powerful Motives, which I forbear in Honour to you, you will have the Goodness to excuse the Liberty I have taken, which is so suitable to the Laws of Friendship, by which I am bound to be, dear Madam,

Your zealous Well-wifter, and bumble Servant.

Instructions to young Orphan Ladies, as well as others, how to judge of Proposals of Marriage made to them without their Guardians or Friends Consent, by their Milaners, Mantuamakers, or other Go-betweens.

A Young Orphan Lady, of an independent Fortune, receivable at Age, or Day of Marriage, will hardly fail of feveral Attempts to engage her Affections. And the following general Rules and Instructions will be of Use to her on these Occasions: who thoo introduced who Core Man thin Exp Frie the Mild fo b way her

The by this Th

flant

wort

tune

" grea

" deep

" eafil

" mak

In the first place, she ought to mistrust all those who shall seek to set her against her Guardian, or those Relations to whom her Fortune or Person is intrusted: And, next, to be apprehensive of all fuch as privately want to be introduced to her, and who avoid treating with her Guardian first for his For the may be affur'd, that if a young Man has Propofals to make, which he himself thinks would be accepted by a Person of Years and Experience, he will apply in a regular way to her Friends; but if he has not, he will hope to engage the young Lady's Affections by the means of her. Milaner, her Mantua-maker, or her Servant; and fo by Bribes and Promises endeavour to make his way to her Favour, in order to take Advantage of her Youth and Inexperience: For this is the conflant Method of Fortune-hunters, to which many a worthy young Lady of good Sense and good Fortune has owed her utter Ruin.

The following are generally the Methods taken by this Set of Designers:

These industrious Go-betweens, who hope to make a Market of a young Lady's Affections, generally by Letter, or Word of Mouth, if they have Opportunity, set forth to the young Lady,

11

"That there is a certain young Gentleman of great Merit, of a handsome Person, and fine Expectations, or prosperous Business, who is fallen deeply in Love with her. And very probably, the young Lady, having no bad Opinion of herfelf, and loving to be admired, believes it very easily.

"That he has feen her at Church, or the Opera, the Play, the Affemblée, &c. and is impatient to " make known his Passion to her.

"That he is unwilling to apply to her Guardian, till he knows how his Address will be received by se herself.

"That, besides, it may very probably be the Case, that her Guardian may form Obstacles, which may not be reasonable on her Part to " give into.

That, if he has Daughters of his own, he " would perhaps rather fee them marry'd first.

"That he may not care to part with her Fortune, and the Reputation and Convenience the " Management of it may give him.

"That he may defign to marry her, when he thinks proper, to some Person agreeable to his own Interest or Inclinations, without consulting

bers as he ought.

"That, therefore, it would be best, that her Guardian should know nothing of the Matter,

" till she saw whether she could approve the Gen" tleman or not.

That even then she might encourage his Ad" dress, or discountenance it as she pleased.

"That, for her the Proposer's part, she had no Interest in the World, one way or other; and no

"View, but to ferve the young Lady, and to oblige a young Gentleman fo well qualify'd to "make her happy." And fuch-like plaufible Affurances; ending, perhaps, "with defiring to bring on an Interview, or, if that will not be admitted, that she will receive a Letter from him."

This kind of Introduction ought always to be suspected by a prudent young Lady. She ought with Warmth and Resentment to discourage the officious Proposer. She ought to acquaint her,

"That she is resolved never to give way to a Proposal of this Importance, without the Consent

" and Approbation of her Guardian or Friends.

66 That

6

66 /

66 0

" fi

66 10

cc po

66 C

ss for

" or

" her

" wh

" ren

" and 66 10

" And

" Inte

" who

" Proj

" fuch

" nuat

" fon

" her t

" to a

" and

" and

" many

" her.

" TI

" man

" of he

" to ma

66

" Re

"That her good Father or Mother, who had "feen the World, and had many Years Experience of her Guardian's Honour and Qualifications for fuch a Trust, knew what they did, when they put her under his Care.

"That he had always shewn an honest and gene" rous Regard for her Welfare.

"That she took it very unkindly of the Proposer, to offer to inspire her with Doubts of his "Conduct, when she had none herself, nor Reason for any.

"That it was Time enough when he gave her "Reason, to be apprehensive of his sinister Designs,

"or of his preferring his own Interest to hers.

"That it was a very strange Attempt to make her mistrust a Friend, a Relation, a Gentleman, who was chosen for this Trust by her dear Patrents, on many Years Experience of his Honour and Probity, and of whose Goodness to her, for so long time past, she herself had many Proofs:

"And this in Favour of a Person who had a visible Interest to induce him to this Application; whose Person she could not judge of; who began by such mean, such groundless, such unworthy Insinuations: Who might, or might not, be the Person he pretended; and who wanted to induce her to prefer himself, on no Acquaintance at all,

"her to prefer himself, on no Acquaintance at all, to a Gentleman she had so many Years known;

"and whose Honour, good Character, Reputation, and Conscience, were all engaged to her as so many Pledges for his honourable Behaviour to

" her.

0

t

e rt

at

"That she the Proposer, and the young Gentle-"man too, must have a very indifferent Opinion "of her Gratitude, her Prudence, her Discretion, to make such an Attempt upon her.

cc That

That if he could approve himself to a Man of Years and Experience, who was not to be im-

" posed upon by blind Passion, in the Light he wanted to appear in to ber, why should he not " apply to him first?

"That furely it was a very ungenerous as well as fuspicious Method of Proceeding, that he could find no other way to give her an Opinion of himfelf, but by endeavouring to depreciate the Cha" racter of a Gentleman, who, by this Method, plainly appeared to his own Apprehension to stand in the way of his Proceedings; and that too be" fore he had try'd him; and which shewed, that " he himself had not hope of succeeding, but by Arts of Delusion, Flattery, and a clandestine "Arts of Delujion, Flattery, and a clandestine "Address; and had nothing but her own Inadvert-

" ence and Inexperience to build upon.

"That, therefore, it behoved her, had she no other Reason, to reject with Resentment and "Disdain a Conduct so affrontive to her Underflanding, as well as selfish and ungenerous in the " Proposer.

"That, therefore, she would not countenance any Interview with a Person capable of acting in fuch a manner, nor receive any Letter from him.

"And lastly, that she desires never to hear of this Matter again, from her the Proposer, if she " would have her retain for her that good Opinion

" which she had hitherto had."

This prudent Reasoning and Conduct will make the Intervener quit her Design upon the young Lady, if she is not wholly abandoned of all Sense of Shame, and corrupted by high Bribes and Promises; and in this Case, the young Lady will judge how unsit such a Person is either for her Consident or Acquaintance. Nor will the Lady lose an humble Servant worthy of being retain'd or encourag'd: For

if ply her mo ma men his to d has may

froi

fon

I In you intire Gua fort, Appr and to for m Write image Handd into to is the

it m

than would

tive in

if he be the Person he pretends, he will directly apply to her Guardian, and have a high Opinion of her Prudence and Discretion; and if she hears no more of him, she may conclude, he could not make good his Pretensions to a Person of Discernment, and will have Occasion to rejoice in escaping his designing Arts with so little Trouble to herself.

If a Lady has had actually a Letter delivered her from such a Pretender, and that by means of a Perfon who has any Share in her Confidence, and wants a Form of a Letter to send to the Recommender to discourage the Proceeding; the following, which has been sent with good Effect, on a like Occasion, may be proper.

LETTER XCV.

Mrs. Pratt,

t

8 0

d

e

0

11

.

of 10 n

ke

19 le

0= ge

nt ole

or

if

I Inclose the Letter you put into my Hands, and hope it will be the last I shall ever receive from you or any body else on the like Occasion. intirely fatisfied in the Care and Kindness of my Guardian, and shall encourage no Proposal of this fort, but what comes recommended to me by his Approbation. He knows the World. I do not; and that which is not fit for him to know, is not fit for me to receive; and I am forry either you or the Writer looks upon me in fo weak a Light, as to imagine I would wish to take myself out of the Hands of so experienced a Friend, to throw myself into those of a Stranger. Yet I would not, as this is the first Attempt of the kind from you, and that it may rather be the Effect of Inconsideration, than Design, shew it my Guardian; because he would not perhaps impute it to so favourable a Motive in you, as I am willing to do, being

If there be no Go-between, but that a young Fellow takes upon himself to fend Letters to teize a young Lady to encourage his Address, by his romantick Professions of his Affection and Regard for her, and attributing fuch Perfections to her, as no one Woman ever had; and if she is desirous, but knows not how, to get rid of his troublesome Importunity; and that even a contemptuous Silence, which it is prudent for a young Lady to shew on fuch an Occasion, has no Effect upon him; nor yet that he will defift, tho' she returns his Letters unopen'd, or in a blank Cover, after the happens to have read them; then let the Lady get fome Friend to write to him, looking upon him as beneath her own Notice: For even a Denial, if given in Writing under her own Hand, will encourage fome prefumptuous Men; or at least they may make some Use of it to the Lady's Disadvantage; and ought not to have it to boast, that they have received a Letter from her, tho' ever fo much to their own Difcredit, if it were shewn. And the following may be the Form:

LETTER XCVI.

SIR

YOU have thought fit to write to Mifs Knollys twice or thrice in a very troublesome manner. She cannot possibly fo far forget what belongs to Herself and Character, as to answer you any other way than by the Contempt of Silence. Yet fince the cannot, it feems, be free from your Impertinence, fhe wishes you may be told, That you must have as mean an Opinion of her Judgment, as all who read your Epistles, must have of yours, if you can expect Success from such inconsistent Rhapfodies.

I will

1 of a add

in Senj

Lam

lowi

mista

your

it bac

fend in better

If t

Severit in Ron

not pro

ferve:

SI

thin good O

IAM

give yo

Letters.

I will from myself venture to give you one Piece of Advice; That the next Person you pretend to address with your bright Compositions, you don't in them forget one Ingredient, which is Common Sense; tho' you should be forced to borrow it. I am Yours, unknown.

Or, if this be thought too affronting, the following:

LETTER XCVII.

SIR,

T

8

e

2

'n

100 lys

er. to nce ti-uit

all

you

ap-

Will

YOU are defired to fend no more of your elaborate Epistles to Miss Knollys. You are quite mistaken in the Lady. She knows herfelf, and by your Letter she knows you, so well, that she sends it back, that you may find some other Person to send it to, whose Sentiments and Understanding are better proportion'd to your own. I am, Sir, &c.

If the Letters of the young Fellow deserve less Severity, and are such as have not their Foundation in Romance and Bombast, but yet the Lady thinks not proper to encourage his Address, this Form may serve:

LETTER XCVIII.

SIR,

I AM desir'd to acquaint you, that Miss Knollys thinks herself obliged to every one who has a good Opinion of her; but begs, that you will not give yourself, or her, the Trouble of any more Letters. For Things are so circumstanced, that she has neither Inclination nor Power to encourage your Address. I am, Sir,

Your humble Servant, unknown.

If the Lady has a mind to rebuke the Attempt of a clandestine Address to her, and yet thinks the Proposal not absolutely unworthy of Attention, did it come regularly to her, by means of her Father, Mother, Guardian, &c. this Form may be observed:

LETTER XCIX.

SIR,

M ISS Knollys desires you should be informed, which she presumes you did not know, That she can never think herself at her own Disposal, while she has so near and so good a Friend to advise with as Mr. Archer, whose Wisdom she much prefers to her own, as his Experience in the World, and Kindness to her, make him deserve to be consulted, in all her Affairs of Moment. Whatever shall appear fit to him, will have great Weight with her; and there is but that one possible way to engage her Attention. I am, Sir,

Yours, &c.

Or, if the Lady has not a Guardian, or Father, or Mother, but some Friend in whom she can confide, the following may be a proper Form:

LETTER C.

SIR,

I T may not be amiss to acquaint you, that Miss Knollys is so happy as to have a Friend of Experience and Probity, without whose Advice the under

-

From

Aff

may ceive

any

fu

Hon I A M prefe

fultained great Danother ever Shi tisfaction

most Important Occasions.

143 undertakes nothing of Consequence. It is Mr. Salter, of Grace-church-street. And she will not care to admit of any Proposal of Moment to her that has not passed his Approbation. This, she hopes, will save her and yourself the Trouble of any further Application. I am

Your humble Servant.

Or this:

LETTER CI.

SIR,

MR. Salter, of Grace-church-street, being a Gentleman that Miss Knollys consults in all her Affairs, she refers to him all Proposals that are or may be of Importance to her; and desires to receive no more Letters or Messages from you, by any other Hand. I am

Your humble Servant, unknown.

LETTER CII.

From a Town-Tenant to his Landlord, excusing.

Delay of Payment.

Honoured Sir,

I AM under a great Concern, that I cannot at present answer your just Expectations. I have sustained such heavy Losses, and met with such great Disappointments of late, that I must intrude another Quarter on your Goodness. Then, whatever Shifts I am put to, you shall hear to more Satisfaction than at present, from, Sir,

Your most humble Servant.

H

LET-

d, at al, ife re-

onever with en-

ld,

ther,

Sic.

e Mili

ce she

LETTER CIII.

From a Country Tenant to the Same Purpose.

Honoured Sir,

THE Season has been so bad, and I have had such unhappy Accidents to encounter with in a sick Family, Loss of Cattle, &c. that I am obliged to trespass upon your Patience a Month or two longer. The Wheat-harvest, I hope, will surnish me the Means to answer your just Expectations; which will be a great Contentment to Your honest Tenant, and humble Servant.

LETTER CIV.

The Landlord's Answer.

Mr. Jacobs,

I HAVE yours: I hope you'll be as good as your Word at the Expiration of the Time you have mentioned. I am unwilling to diffress any honest Man; and I hope, that I shall not meet with the worse Usage for my Forbearance. For Lenity abused, even in generous Tempers, provokes Returns, that some People would call severe; but should not be deemed such, if just. I am

Yours, &c.

you

thro

paid

So wou

rate Of

Go

I A

Fami

how ( any n hope !

Almig

hard Forgiv
his Ho
I w
know,

honest I am s

LET-

LETTER CV.

A threatening Letter from a Steward on Delay of Payment.

Mr. Atkins,

I HAVE mentioned your Case to Sir John, as you requested. He is exceedingly provoked at your Usage, and swears bloodily he'll seize, and throw you into Gaol, if he has not 20 1. at least paid him by Quarter-day, which is now at hand. So you know what you have to trust to; and I would have you avoid the Consequences at any rate; for he is resolved otherwise to do as he says. Of this I affure you, who am

Yours, &c.

LETTER CVI.

The poor Tenant's moving Answer.

Good Mr. Taverner,

C.

AM at my Wits-end almost on what you write. But if I am to be ruined, with my numerous Family, and a poor, industrious, but ailing Wife, how can I help it? For I cannot possibly raise 20%. any manner of way by the Time you mention. I hope Sir John won't be hard-hearted. For if God Almighty, our common Landlord, should be equally hard upon us, what would become of us all? Forgive my Boldness to talk of God Almighty to his Honour, in this free manner.

I would do it, if it was to be done; but you know, Sir, what a Season we have had. And an honester Tenant his Honour will never have, that I am fure of. But if Money won't rife, what can

I do? Should I fell my Team, and my Utenfils for Labour, there is an End of all. I shall have no Means left me then wherewith to pay his Honour, or any body else. If his Honour will not be moved. but will feize, pray, good Mr. Taverner, prevail on him not to throw me into Gaol, for a Prison pays no Debts; but let my poor Wife and Six small Children lie in the Barn, till I can get a little Day-labour; for that must be all I can have to trust to, if his Honour seizes. I hear my Man William that was, has just taken a Farm; may be, he will employ his poor ruin'd Master, if I am not 'prison'd. But if I be, why then the Parish must do fomething for my poor Children, tho' I hoped they would never trouble it. Lay these things before his Honour, good Sir, and forgive this Trouble from His Honour's honest, the' unfortunate Tenant.

fet

che fur

of :

No

Hea

you to p

my could and have nor i them

only are g

this .

fay n

a Ble

no m

LETTER CVII.

The Steward's Reply, giving more Time.

Mr. Atkins,

I HAVE laid your Letter and your Case before Sir John: He is moved with it, and says he will have Patience another Quarter, to see what you'll do. Consider, Man, however, that Gentlemen live at a great Expence, are obliged to keep up their Port, and if their Tenants sail them, why then they must sail their Tradesmen, and suffer in their Credit. You have good Crops of all Kinds on the Ground; and surely may, by next Quarter, raise 40 or 50 l. tho' you could not raise 20 l. in a Fortnight. This Sir John will expect at least, I can tell you. And you may comply with it from the Produce of fo good a Farm, furely.

Yours, &c.

LETTER CVIII.

The poor Man's thankful Letter in Return.

GOD bless his Honour, and God bless you, Mr. Taverner, that's all I can say. We will now fet our Hands to the Plough, as the Saying is, with chearful Hearts, and try what can be done. I am fure, I, and my Wife and Children too, tho' three of them can but lisp their Prayers, shall, Morning, Noon and Night, pray to God for his Honour's Health and Prosperity, as well as for you and yours; and to enable me to be just to his Expectations. I'm fure it would be the Pride of my Heart to pay every body, his Honour especially. not run behind-hand for want of Industry; that all my Neighbours know; but Losses and Sickness L could not help; and nobody could live more frugaland sparing than both my Wife and I. Indeed we have hardly allowed ourselves Cloaths to our Backs, nor for our Children neither, tight, and clean, and wholsome as they may appear to those who see them: And we will continue to live fo low as may only keep us in Heart to do our Labour, until we are got before-hand; which God grant. But all this I told you before, Mr. Taverner; and so will lay no more, but I will do all I can, and God give: a Bleffing to my Labours, as I mean honeftly. So no more, but that I am, Sir,

re

he

Tist

11-cep

hv

n

nds

ter,

in a , I

HL

Your ever-obliged Servant.

LETTER CIX.

An Offer of Affistance to a Friend who has received great Losses by a Person's Failure.

Dear Sir,

I AM exceedingly concerned at the great Loss which you have lately sustained, by the Failure of Mr. Tranter. I hope you behave under it like the Man of Prudence you have always shewn yourfelf, and as one who knows how liable all Men are to Misfortunes. I think it incumbent, on this Occasion, not to console you by Words only; but in the Spirit, and with the Chearfulness, of a most fincere Friend, to offer my Service to answer any prefent Demand, fo far as 200 l. goes, which you shall have the Use of freely for a Twelve-month, or more, if your Affairs require it; and will even strain a Point rather than not oblige you, if more be necessary to your present Situation. You'll do me great Pleasure in accepting this Offer as freely, as it is kindly meant by, dear Sir, Yours most faithfully.

LETTER CX.

The Friend's Answer, accepting the kind Offer.

My dear Friend,

HOW shall I find Words to express the grateful Sense I have of your Goodness? This is an Instance of true Friendship indeed! I accept most thankfully of fome Part of your generous Offer, and will give you my Bond, payable in a Year, for 100 l. which is, at present, all I have Occasion for;

all

at

Affi

Wo

Ian

Of

I A

finem

It, tha

carry the u

for; and if I did not know I could then, if not before, answer your Goodness as it deserves, I would not accept of the Favour. This Loss is very heavy and affecting to me, as you may suppose; vet your generous Friendship is no small Comfort to me in it. For so good a Friend is capable of making any Calamity light. I am, dear Sir,

Your most faithful and obliged humble Servant.

LETTER CXI.

The Friend's Answer, supposing be bas no Occasion.

Dear Sir,

u

n

0 ul ın

ft

r,

r,

n 1;

Thousand Thanks to you for your generous A Offer, and kind Advice. I have been not a little affected at the unexpected Failure of a Man all the World thought as good as the Bank. But, at present, I have no Occasion for your friendly Affistance. If I should, I know no one in the World I would fooner chuse to be obliged to; for lam, dear, kind Sir,

Your most obliged humble Servant.

LETTER CXII.

Of Consolation to a Friend in Prison for Debt.

Dear Sir,

AM exceedingly concerned to hear, that the Severity of your Creditors has laid you under Conhnement. But there is one Comfort results from it, that the utmost Stretch of their Revenge cannot carry them farther; and that when a Man is got to the undermost Part of Fortune's Wheel, he may rife, rife, but cannot fink lower. You now know the worst, and have nothing to do, but to support your Misfortune with that true Magnanimity which becomes a noble Mind. Long, very long, have you been labouring under great Difficulties, and so have been inured to Misfortunes; and you have looked forward with fuch Anxiety and Pain to the hard Lot that has now befallen you, that 'tis impossible the bearing of it can be equal to the Apprehensions you had of it. You fee all around you too many unhappy Oliests reduced to the same Distress; and you fee them either extricating themselves from those Difficulties (as I hope you foon will), or learning to bear them with a true Christian Resignation. For well does the wife Man observe, that the Race is not to the Swift, nor the Battle to the Strong, nor Riches to a Man of Understanding. And it will yield you fome Consolation, when you reflect, that this Life is but a State of Probation, and he that meets with Misfortunes here, may, by a proper Use of them, and by God's Grace, be intitled to a bleffed Hope; when a prosperous State may make a Man forgetful of his Duty, and fo reap no other Good but what he finds in this transitory Life. Remember, my Friend, that the School of Affliction is the School of Wisdom; and so behave under this trying Calamity, as to fay, with the Royal Prophet, It is good for me, that I was afflicted.

H 4

fp

by jui pu

do

do

Tho

ha

me

ten

yet

wa: pra

froi

my hap

don

to c beg to j

my bea

OUL

I think myself, however, not a little unhappy, that my Circumstances will not permit me to assist you on this grievous Occasion, in the way a Friend would chuse to do, if he was able; but if, by my personal Attendance on any of your Creditors or Friends, I can do you Pleasure or Service, I beg you to command me. For, in whatever is in my poor Power, I am, and shall ever be,

Your faithful Friend and Servant. L E T-

LETTER

In Answer to the preceding.

Dear Sir,

I Now experience fully the Truth of the honest English Phrase, That a Friend in Need is a Friend in Deed. You have filled me with fuch unspeakable Comfort, to find that I am not abandon'd by all my old Acquaintance, that, in a great meafure, your seasonable Kindness will enable me to purfue the Advice you give me.

It is too late to look back now on the Steps that have brought me to this abject Condition. No doubt, were I to live my Life over again, I could do much better for myself than I have done, and should hardly run into some of the Failings that have help'd to bring fuch heavy Misfortunes upon me. But my Comfort is, I ever had an honest Intention, and never was a Sot or a Spendthrift. But yet, who knows, if I had avoided some Mistakes, that I might not have fallen into as bad another way? So I must acquiesce in the Dispensation, and pray to God, in his own good Time, to deliver me from it.

What is most grievous to me in this Matter is, my poor Wife and Children, who have deferved a happier Fate, had it been in my Power to have done better for them, than now I am ever likely to do.

As to your kind Offer, my dear Friend, I will beg to see you as often as may not be detrimental to your own Affairs. I care not how feldom I fee my dear Wife: Neither her Heart nor mine can bear the Grief that oppresses us when we think of our happier Days and Prospects, and see them all concluded concluded within these Bars, and Bolts, and Lattices; fo that we fink one another fill lower every doleful Vifit the dear good Woman makes me. But your Visits, my Friend, will be of fingular Use and Comfort to me (as your Presence and kind Advice will be to her, as often as you can), to fave us both the Mortification of feeing one another fo often as my Affairs will otherwise require her to come to this difmal Place; for I cannot open my Mind to any body but you and her. I will also get you to go to Mr. Maddox, my principal Creditor, and one or two more; I will tell you about what; and only fear I shall be too troublesome to you. But you are so kind as to offer your Service in this way, and I am reduced to the fad Necessity of pushing myself upon you, without the least Hope of ever having it in my Power to shew you, as I wish to do, how much I am

HS

Your ungrateful, tho' unhappy Servant.

this

to hav

by and

An

fairs.

With !

LETTER CXIV.

To a Person of Note, in Acknowlegement of great Benefits received.

Honoured Sir,

PERMIT me to approach you with the thankful Acknowlegements of a grateful Heart, on the Favour and Benefit your Goodness has conferred upon me. It shall be the Business of my whole Life, to the utmost of my Power, to deserve it; and my whole Family, which you have made happy by your Bounty, will every Day join with me in Prayers to God, to bless you with the Continuance of your valuable Health, a long Life,

Life, and all worldly Honour; for so it will become us to do, for the unmerited Favours confer'd upon, honoured Sir,

Your most dutiful Servant.

LETTER CXV:

Another for Favours of not so high, yet of a generous Nature.

Worthy Sir,

I should appear ungrateful, if I did not add this further Trouble to those I have already given you, of acknowleging your Goodness to me, in this last Instance of it. May God Almighty return to you, Sir, one hundredfold, the Benefit you have conferr'd upon me, and give me Opportunity, by my future Services, to shew my grateful Heart, and how much I am, worthy Sir,

Your for-ever obliged and dutiful Servant.

LETTER CXVI.

An Excuse to a Person who wants to borrow.

Money.

SIR,

t.

of

(-

nc

n-

ny.

eve

in

th ng e, I AM very forry, that your Request comes to me at a time when I am so press'd by my own Affairs, that I cannot with any Conveniency comply with it. I hope, Sir, you will therefore excuse

Your most humble Servant.

LETTER CXVII.

On the Same Subject.

8 1 R;

I HAVE, on an urgent Occasion, been obliged to borrow a Sum of Money myself within ten Days past: Hence you'll judge of my Want of Camerty, rather than Inclination, to comply with your Request. For I am

Your sincere Friend.

to

y'o

for

at

th

To

of

littl

or (

my

alw:

mu

LETTER CXVIII.

On the same Subject.

SIR,

open to you, on occasion of the Loan you request of me, my own Inability. Is shall make very hard Shift to answer some necessary Demands, which must be comply'd with by a certain Time; and so can only say, I am forry I have it not in my Power to shew how sincerely I am

Your most humble Servant.

LETTER CXIX.

To a Priend, in Compliance with his Request to borrow a Sum of Money.

SIR,

you make me. I most chearfully comply with it, and inclose a Note for the requested Sum, payable on Sight; and am not a little glad it is in my Power to shew you how much I am

Your faithful Friend and Servant.

LET-

of.

LETTER CXX.

Another on the same Occasion, limiting the Re-

SIR,

THE Intimation you give me, that the Sum of 50 Pounds will be of great Use to you, and that you shall be able to repay it in Four Months, makes me resolve to put myself to some Difficulty to oblige you. Accordingly, I inclose a Bank Note to that Amount. But I must, in the Name of Friendship, beg of you to return it to me unused, if you cannot keep your Word in the Repayment; for my accommodating you with this Sum is rather, at present, a greater Testimony of my Inclination than Ability to serve you: For I am

Your affectionate Friend and Servant.

LETTER CXXI.

To a Friend, on a Breach of Promise in not returning Money lent in his Exigence.

SIR.

t.

to

eft ith

y-

ny.

nt.

T-

WHEN you apply'd to me, in your Streights, for Affistance, and made such strong Promises of returning in Four Months what I advanced; little did I think, you would give me the irksome Occasion, either of reminding you of your Promise, or of acquainting you with the Streights in which my Friendship for you has involv'd myself. I have always endeavour'd to manage my Affairs with so much Prudence, as to keep within myself the Power-of answering Demands upon me, without troubling my Friends; and I told you, I must expect you would keep your Word exactly to the Four Months, or elfe I should be diffres'd, as bad as you were when you apply'd to me. Six Months paffed, and you took no manner of Notice of the Matter. when I was forced to remind you of it, having been put to it, as I told you I should. You took a Fortnight longer, under still stronger Promises of Performance. And Three Weeks are now expir'd, and your fecond Promises are still as much to be performed as your first. Is this kind, is this friendly, is it grateful, Sir, let me ask you? And ought I to be made to fuffer in my Credit, who was so ready to fave yours? ---- When, too, mine had been in no Danger, had I not put out of my own Power what actually was then in it? I will only fay, That if any Confideration remains with you for one fo truly your Friend, let me immediately be paid, and take from me the cruel Necessity of reproaching you for Ingratitude, and myself for Folly: Who am, Sir,

Your unkindly used, &c.

LETTER CXXII.

To a Friend, who had promised to lend a Sum of Money, to answer a critical Exigence, and drove it off to the last.

Dear Sir,

YOU were so kind as to tell me, a Fortnight ago, that you would lend me One hundred Pounds on my Bond, to answer a Demand that my Credit would be otherwise a Sufferer by. And you were pleased to say, you would have me look no further,

Pay Min havi Sir, Min to w batic being I hop fur

The .

Dea

I Women the The Month of the Pain and Mind for Cally cine, thou as well Power, further, and that I should certainly have it in time. I have looked no further, Sir; and the Day of Payment approaching, you cannot imagine how my Mind has suffered by being not absolutely sure of having the Money to answer the Demand. I hope, Sir, nothing has happen'd to make you alter your Mind; for, at this short Notice, I shall not know to whom to apply to raise it. In the utmost Perturbation of Mind, for fear of the worst, my Credit being wholly at Stake, I beg your Answer, which I hope will be to the Satisfaction of, Sir,

Your obliged bumble Servant.

LETTER CXXIII.

The Answer, excusing the Pain he had given his Friend by his Remissings.

Dear Sir,

I WILL attend you this Afternoon with the Money, which I had always great Pleasure in the Thought of supplying you with; and I am most heartily vexed with myself, for giving you the Pain and Uneasiness that must have attended a Mind so punctual as yours, and in a Case so critically circumstanced. But I hope you'll forgive me, tho' I can hardly forgive myself. I am, Sir, as well on this, as on any other Occasion in my Power,

Your sincere Friend and Servant.

LETTER CXXIV.

To one who, upon a very short Acquaintance, and without any visible Merit but Assurance, wants to borrow a Sum of Money.

SIR,

YOU did me the Favour of inquiring for me two or three times while I was out of Town. And among my Letters I find one from you, defiring the Loan of 50 Guineas. You must certainly have mistaken yourself or me very much, to think we were enough known to each other for I was twice in your Comfuch a Transaction. pany; I was delighted with your Conversation: You feemed as much pleased with mine: And if we both acted with Honour, the Obligation is mutual, and there can be no room to suppose me your Debtor. I have no churlish nor avaritious Heart, I will venture to fay; but there must be Bounds to every thing; and Discretion is as necessary in conferring as in receiving a Kindness. To a Friend, my helping Hand ought to be lent, when his Necessities require it: You cannot think our Intimacy enough to commence that Relation; and should I answer the Demands of every new Acquaintance, I should foon want Power to oblige my old Friends, and even to serve myself. Surely, Sir, a Gentleman of your Merit cannot be so little beloved, as to be forced to feek to a new Acquaintance, and to have no better Friend than one of Yesterday. I will not do you the Injury to suppose, that you have not many, who have the best Reasons from long Knowlege, to oblige you: And, by your Application to me, 1 cannot think Bashfulness should stand in your way 10 to m an

A.

when a Riv 13 rec can b Monl reasor you t happy Favou But w can yo Compe Light: endowe he do, v lity, to tion in part, I before y

and our reet.

to them. Be this as it may, it does not at all fuit my Conveniency to comply with your Request; and so I must beg you to excuse

Yours, &c.

LETTER CXXV.

A Gentleman to a Lady who humourously refents his Mistress's Fondness of a Monkey, and Indifference to himself.

Madam,

0

T

u

10

to

iV

10

MUST be under the less Regret, for the Contempt with which you receive my Addresses, when your Favour is wholly engroffed by fo wretched a Rival: For ought a rational Man to wonder he is received with Neglect and Slight by a Lady who can be taken up with the Admiration of a chattering Monkey? But pray be fo good as to permit me to reason the Matter a little with you. I would ask you then, By what extraordinary Endowment this happy Creature has found Means to engross your Favour? Extravagance is never commendable: But while I am dying beneath your Frowns, how can you be profuse in your Caresses to so mean a Competitor? Condescend to view us in the same Light: What valuable Qualification is Mr. Pug endowed with, which I am destitute of? What can he do, which I cannot perform, tho' with less Agility, to full as good Purpose? Is it a Recommendation in him, that he wears no Breeches? For my part, I will most willingly furrender mine at your Feet. Be impartial for once: Place us together before you: View our Faces, our Airs, our Shapes, and our Language. If he be handsomer than I, which, which, on a strict Scrutiuy, I hope will not be allowed him neither, pray try our Wits: However acute he may be, I can assure you I reckon myself no Fool; if I was, I should less refent the Preference you give against me. I will sing or dance with him for his Ears: Turn him loose to me, I will sight him, if that be necessary to obtain your Favour; or do any thing in the World to shew you how much I am, and shall ever be, if you'll permit it,

Your very humble Admirer.

an

I

riv

25

we

Both It is can !

my t

I hav But,

should

Yet,

and or fo you

....0

hundre

to my tunitie

writter

all Frie

cludes r

deare

LETTER CXXVI.

A Sailor to his betrothed Mistress.

My dear Peggy, Barbados, Oct. 9.

If you think of me half so often as I do of you, it will be every Hour; for you are never out of my Thoughts, and, when I am asseep, I constantly dream of my dear Peggy. I wear my Half-bit of Gold always at my Heart, ty'd to a blue Ribband round my Neck; for True Blue, my dearest Love, is the Colour of Colours to me. Where, my Dearest, do you put yours? I hope you are careful of it;

I hope you hold in the same Mind still, my dearest Dear; for God will never bless you, if you break the Vows you have made to me. As to your ever faithful William, I would sooner have my Heart torn from my Breast, than it should harbour a Wish for any other Woman besides my Peggy. O my dearest Love! you are the Joy of my Life! My Thoughts are all of you; you are with me in all I do; and my Hope and my Wish are only to be yours. God send it may be so!

Our Captain talks of failing foon for England; and then, and then—my dearest Peggy!—O how I rejoice, how my Heart beats with Delight, that makes me I cannot tell how, when I think of arriving in England, and joining Hands with my Peggy, as we have Hearts before, I hope! I am sure I speak for one.

John Arthur, in the good Ship Elizabeth, Capt. Winterton, which is returning to England (as I hope we shall soon), promises to deliver this into your own dear Hand; and he will bring you too, Six Bottles of Citron-water, as a Token of my Love. It is fit for the finest Ladies Taste, it is so good; and it is what, they say, Ladies drink, when they can get it.

ľ

John fays, he will have one sweet Kiss of my dearest Peggy, for his Care and Pains. So let him, my best Love; for I am not of a jealous Temper. I have a better Opinion of my Dearest, than fo.---But, Oh! that I was in his Place!---One Kiss should not serve my Turn, tho' I hope it may his !---Yet, if he takes two, I'll forgive him; one for me, and one for himself. For I love John dearly; and so you may well think. Well, what shall I say more? ...Or, rather, what shall I say next? For I have an hundred things crouding in upon me, when I write to my Dearest; and, alas! one has so few Opportunities! But yet I must leave off; for I have written to the Bottom of my Paper. Love then to all Friends, and Duty to both our Mothers, concludes me

Your faithful Lover till Death.

LETTER CXXVII.

Her Answer.

Dear William,

FOR fo I may call you now we are fure; and fo my Mother fays. This is to let you know, that nothing shall prevail upon me to alter my Promise made to you, when we parted: With heavy Hearts enough, that's true: And yet I had a little Inkling given me, that Mr. Alford's Son the Carpenter would be glad to make Love to me: But, do you think I would fuffer it? No, indeed! For I doubt not your Loyalty to me, and do you think I will not be as loyal to you!----To be fure I will. These Sailors run fuch sad Chances, faid one that you and I both know. They may return, and they may not. Well, I will trust in God for that, who has return'd fafe to his Friends, their dear Billy, fo many a time, and often. They will have a Mistress in every Land they come to, faid they. All are not fuch naughty Men, faid I; and I'll trust Billy Oliver all the World over. For why cannot Men be as faithful as Women, tro'? And for me, I am fure no Love shall ever touch my Heart but yours.

God fend us a happy Meeting! Let who will speak against Sailors; they are the Glory and the Saseguard of the Land. And what would have become of Old England long ago but for them? I am sure the lazy good-for-nothing Land-lubbers would never have protected us from our cruel Foes. So Sailors are, and ever shall be, esteemed by me; and, of all Sailors, my dear Billy Oliver. Believe this Truth from

Your faithful, &c.

P. S.

1

VOU

God

Crew

by be

Fruit

very very c

dence

Occas

one;

genera

a Tok

of Cyp

to your fore yo your ov

to prefe

them t'

it shoul

fo fmall

which p

his Due

Cap

P.S. I had this Letter writ in Readiness to fend you, as I had Opportunity. And the Captain's Lady undertakes to fend it with her's. That is very kind and condescending. Is it not?

LETTER CXXVIII.

A Sea-Officer to bis Wife.

Port-Mahon, October 31.

My dear Life,

11 ne

ve

I

ers

es.

e;

eve

Scc.

S.

TAKE the Opportunity afforded me by Captain Copythorne, who is returning to England, to let you know that I am in perfect Health at prefent, God be praised; tho' I have, with many of the Crew, been down of the Bloody-Flux, occasioned by being a little too free with the new Wines and Fruit of these Countries; and yet I thought I was very moderate in both. Our Captain continues very civil and kind, and places his principal Confidence in me; and I endeavour so to behave on the Occasion, as to avoid incurring the Envy of every one; and indeed, have the good Fortune to be generally respected.

Captain Copythorne is so kind as to carry to you a Token of my Affection; which is a small Parcel of Cyprus Wine, that I believe will be agreeable to your best Friend Mrs. Simpson, to whom therefore you may present half, and keep the other for your own Use. The Captain has also Fifty Dollars to prefent you with, from me, only paying out of them the Duty for the Wine; for it is but just, that it should be so, if he cannot meet with Favour in so small a Parcel; for what the Law of the Land, which protects us all, gives to the King, is as much his Due (however other People act), as any Part of my private Property, which is secured to me by the fame Law, is mine: And I am convinc'd, that if every one acted up to this just Principle, there need not be so many Taxes as there are; and the sair Trader, and all honest Men, would be the better for it.

I hope, my dear Jackey and Nancy continue in good Health, and dutiful, and come on in their Schooling; for that will stand them in stead, perhaps, when the poor Matters we are enabled to do for them, may not be worth truffing to.

I long to fee my dear Betty. God give us a happy Meeting, if it be his bleffed Will. But, I believe, it will hardly be till we have humbled the proud fack Spaniard: Which God also grant. For that Nation has been very vile and base to us honest Englishmen. This concludes me at present

Your ever-loving Husband.

pl

yo

are one

the mor

Con

than

Fame

of th prefer

there come.

and sh

aforeha not yet

fay, the

God wil

had the l way. I John La quaintance that I am

W

Love and Service to all Friends.

LETTER CXXIX.

A Wife to ber Husband at Sea.

My Dear,

I Think it a long Time fince I have had the Comfort and Satisfaction of hearing of your Welfare. Often and often do I reflect on the Unhappiness of us poor Women, who are marry'd to Seafaring Men. Every Wind that blows, every Pirate we hear of, and now, in Time of War, every Hour of our Lives, the Dread of Enemies alarms us. God's Providence is our Reliance, and so it ought; for nothing else can sustain us thro' our different Apprehentions every Day we live. But to be sure the Unhappiness is still greater to such as love one another, other, as we always did. I hope, when it shall please God to return you safe to my Wishes, that you will take no more of these very long Voyages, if you can help it. The Trips to Holland or France are so pretty, that they rather add to, than diminish one's Comforts: But, Oh, these long, long Voyages! Yet, in Time of War, People cannot do as they will. And I must be contented; and the more, when I see, that the fine Ladies of Captains, Commodores, and Admirals, are no better off than your poor Jenny.

3

mare.

ring od's

for Ap-

e the e anther,

We have had the Misfortune to lose Uncle James since you went : He was a Landman, out of the Dangers you run; yet, as I hope, God has preserved you, while he is dead and gone. So we see there is nothing to be faid for it, when our Time is They talk of my Aunt's marrying again, and the has a Courtier comes to her, because the is aforehand in the World, and yet Uncle James has not yet been dead three Months. Fie upon her, I fay, tho' she is my Aunt! for she had a good Husband of him. As to you and me, my Dear, I hope God will spare us to one another; for you are my First Love, and shall be my Last. Cousin Barns had the Misfortune to break his Leg, but is in a good Tenny Adams is to be marry'd next Week to John Lascells. This is all the News among our Acquaintance; for I am fure it is none, to tell you, that I am

Your faithful and loving Wife.

LETTER CXXX.

To a Father, on his Neglett of his Childrens Education.

Dear Sir,

AM under a Concern to see such a Remissines, as every body takes notice of, in the Education of your Children. They are brought up, 'tis true, to little Offices in your Business, which keep them active, and may make them in some degree of prefent, tho' poor Use to you; but, I am sorry to say, of none to themselves, with regard to their future Prospects, which is what a worthy Parent always has in View.

h

and

M

" r

66 C

" B

66 ro

" ev

"N

" Ar

" por

" of

"

" turi

" fash

" dow

he obs

Minds

" they

" nor

" not

" fhall

That is of thei

neither

There is a proper Time for every thing; and if Children are not early initiated into their Duty, and those Parts of Learning which are proper to their particular Years, they must necessarily be discouraged, and set behind every one of their Schoolfellows, tho' much younger than themselves; and you know not, Sir, what a laudable Emulation you by this means destroy, than which nothing is of greater Force to Children, to induce them to attend to their Book; nor what a Disgrace you involve them in with respect to Children among Children, for the Biggest and Eldest to be so much outdone by the Least and Youngest.

Nor is the Consequence of this Desect confined to the School-age, as I may call it; for as they grow up, they will be look'd upon in an equally discouraging and disadvantageous Light, by all who converse with them: Which must of course throw them into the Company of the Dregs of Mankind; for how will they be able to converse or correspond with those whose Acquaintance it is made most worth their while to cultivate? And indeed they will probably be so conscious of their Unstracts to bear a Part in worthy Conversation, that, to keep themselves in Countenance, they will, of their own Accord, shun the better Company, and associate with the worst: And what may be the Consequence of this, a wise Man, and a good Father, would tremble to think of, especially when he has to restect upon himself as the Cause of it, let it be what it will.

Then, Sir, it is to be consider'd, that without a tolerable Education they can be only fit for mean and fordid Employments. Hear what the Wife Man fays to this very Purpose: " How can he get "Wisdom, that holdeth the Plough, and that glo-" rieth in the Goad, that driveth Oxen, and is oc-"cupied in their Labours, and whose Talk is of "Bullocks? He giveth his Mind to make Fur-"rows, and is diligent to give the Kine Fodder. So "every Carpenter and Workmaster, that laboureth "Night and Day----The Smith also sitting by the "Anvil, and confidering the Iron-work, the Va-" pour of the Fire wasteth his Flesh --- The Noise " of the Hammer and the Anvil is ever in his Ears " ---- So doth the Potter fitting at his Work, and "turning the Wheel about with his Feet----He "fashioneth the Clay with his Arm, and boweth "down his Strength before his Feet." These, as he observes, are useful in their way; but their Minds being wholly engross'd by their Labours, "they shall not be sought for in publick Council, "nor fit high in the Congregation --- they can-"not declare Justice and Judgment, and they "fhall not be found where Parables are spoken." That is, they shall be confin'd to the Drudgery of their own servile Station, and will be intitled neither to Honour nor Respect, as they might have

S

if

Y,

to 01-nd

ou

of

end

olve!

ren,

one

fin'd

they ually

Who

hrow

Vlan

fe 01

it 1

nel

them for more respectable Businesses. And you will consider, Sir, in a closer Light, as to us who live in the present Age, and in this great City, that there is hardly a creditable or prositable Employment in London, where a tolerable Knowlege of Accompts, and Penmanship, in particular, is not required. Consider also, what Opportunities they may lose by this Neglect of their Education, in case they should fail in the Business they are put to, of getting comfortable and genteel Bread in some Merchant's Compting-house, or in some one of the several Offices about this great Metropolis; as Book-keepers, Clerks, Accomptants, &c.

And with regard more immediately to your felf, how can you expect, when they know you could do better for them, but that their Behaviour to you will be of a Piece with the rest? For if they are not polish'd by Learning, but are left to a kind of Instinct rather, is it to be expected, that they should behave to you, and their Mother, with that Sense of their Obligations which Learning inculcates? Nor, indeed, will they have those Obligations to you, which other Children have to their Parents, who take care to give them Opportunities of Improvement, which are deny'd to yours. Consider, dear Sir, what a contemptible Character, even among the fordid Vulgar, that of an illiterate Fellow is; and what Respect, on the contrary, a Man of Letters is treated with, by his Equals, as well as Inferiors: And when you lay all these plain Reasons and Observations together, I make no doubt but you will endeavour to retrieve lost Time, and be advised in this material Point (which I can have no Interest in) by

Your sincere Friend and Servant.

of

fel

th

Y

VOI

wit lifte

did thou

fides

Ah!

every

I cou

I alu

tho'

Secur

fo fru

Polly

the ha

Indeed

But as have r

I fa

But

LETTER CXXXI.

From a young Maiden, abandon'd by her Lover for the sake of a greater Fortune.

Mr. John,

٢,

3 ;

et-

nns

out

be no

ant.

T-

MUST take up my Pen and write, tho' perhaps you will only scoff at me for so doing; but when I have faid what I have to fay, then I shall have eased my Mind, and will endeavour to forget you for ever. I have had fo many Cautions given me against the false Hearts of Men, and was so often told how they will vow and for swear themselves, that I ought to have been on my Guard, that's true: And indeed, fo I was a great while: You know it well. But you courted me fo long, vowed so earnestly, and feem'd so much in Love with me, that it was first Pity in me, that made me listen to you; and, Oh! this nasty Pity, how soon did it bring----But I won't fay Love neither. thought, if all the young Men in the World besides proved false, yet it was impossible you should. Ah! poor filly Creature that I was, to think, tho' every body flatter'd me with being fightly enough, I could hold a Heart so fordidly bent on Interest, as I always faw yours to be! But that, thought I, tho' 'tis a Meanness I don't like, yet will it be a Security of his making a frugal Husband in an Age to fruitful of -Spendthrifts.

But at length it has proved, that you can prefer Polly Bambridge, and leave poor me, only because the has a greater Portion than I have.

I say nothing against Polly. I wish her well. Indeed I do. And I wish you no Harm neither. But as you knew Polly before, why could you not have made to yourself a Merit with her, without I 2 going so far with me? What need you have so often begg'd and pray'd, sigh'd and vow'd (never leaving me, Day nor Night), till you had got me foolishly to believe and pity you? And so, after your Courtship to me was made a Town-talk, then you could leave me to be laugh'd at by every one I slighted for you! Was this just, was this well done, think

you?

Here I cannot go out of Doors but I have some one or other simpering and sneering at me; and I have had two Willow-garlands sent me; so I have--But what poor Stuff, in some of my own Sex too, is this, to laugh at and deride me for your Baseness? I can call my Heart to witness to my Virtue in Thought, in Word, and in Deed; and must I be ridiculed for a False-one, who gives himself Airs at my Expence, and at the Expence of his own Truth and Honour? Indeed you cannot say the least Ill of me, that's my Comfort. I defy the World to say any thing to blast my Character: Why then should I suffer in the World's Eye, for your Baseness?

n

 1_L

come

Will

long

the

migh

I feek not to move you to return to the Fidelity you have vow'd; for by this Time, mayhap, you'd be as base to Polly as you have been to me, if you did; and I wish her no Willow-garlands, I'll assure you. But yet, let me desire you to speak of me with Decency. That is no more than I deserve, well you know. Don't (to brave thro' the Perfidy you have been guilty of) mention me with fuch Fleers, as, I hear, you have done to feveral; and pray call me none of your poor dear Girls! And, I hope the won't take it to Heart, poor Thing ! --- with that Infolence that fo little becomes you, and I have so little deserved. I thought to have appeal'd to your Conscience, on what has passed between us, when I began. I thought to have put put the Matter home to you! But I have run out into this Length, and now don't think it worth while to write much more: For what is Conscience to a Man who could vow as you have done, and att as you have done?

Go then, Mr. John, naughty Man as you are! I will try to forget you for ever. Rejoice in the Smiles of your Polly Bambridge, and glad your Heart with the Possession of an Hundred or Two of Pounds more than I have; and see what you'll be the richer or happier a few Years hence. I wish no Harm to you. Your Conscience will be a greater Trouble to you than I wish it to be, if you are capable of restecting. And for your sake, I will henceforth set myself up to be an Adviser to all my Sex, never to give Ear to a Man, unless they can be sure that his Interest will be a Security for his pretended Assession to them. I am, tho' greatly injured and deceived, naughty Mr. John,

Your Well-wisher.

LETTER CXXXII.

From a Gentleman to his Mistress, who seeing no Hopes of Success, respectfully withdrawshis Suit.

MADAM,

d ve

ut

I Make no doubt but this will be the welcomest Letter that you ever receiv'd from me; for it comes to assure you, that it is the last Trouble you will ever have from me. Nor should I have so long with-held from you this Satisfaction, had not the Hope your Brother gave me, that in time I might meet with a happier Fate, made me willing to try every way to obtain your Favour. But I fee, all the Hopes given me by his kind Confideration for me, and those that my own Presumption had made me entertain, are all in vain: And I will therefore rid you of fo troublesome an Importuner, having nothing to offer now but my ardent Wishes for your Happiness; and these, Madam, I will purfue you with to my Life's latest Date.

May you, whenever you shall change your Condition, meet with a Heart as passionately, and as fincerely, devoted to you as mine! And may you be happy for many, very many Years, in the Man you can honour with your Love! For, give me leave to fay, Madam, that in this, my End will be in part answer'd, because it was most sincerely your Happiness I had in View, as well as my own, when I prefumptuously hoped, by contributing to the one, to secure the other. I am, Madam, with the highest Veneration,

Your most obedient humble Servant.

fte

he to

10 a S

its

to Pur

We

LETTER CXXXIII.

From a Lady to a Gentleman, who had obtained all ber Friends Confent, urging bim to decline bis Suit to ber.

SIR,

YOU have often importun'd me to return Marks of that Confideration for you, which you profels for me. As my Parents, to whom I owe all Duty, encourage your Address, I wish I could. I am hardly treated by them, because I cannot. What shall I do? Let me apply to you, Sir, for my Relief, Relief, who have much good Sense, and, I hope, Generosity. Yes, Sir, let me bespeak your Humanity to me, and Justice to yourself, in this Point; and that shall be all I will ask in my Favour. I own you deserve a much better Wise than I shall ever make; but yet, as Love is not in one's own Power, if I have the Missortune to know I cannot love you, will not Justice to yourself, if not Pity to me, oblige you to abandon your present Purpose?

But as to myfelf, Sir, Why should you make a poor Creature unhappy in the Displeasure of all her Friends at present, and still more unhappy, if, to avoid that, she gives up her Person, where she cannot bestow her Heart? If you love me, as you prosess, let me ask you, Sir, Is it for my sake, or is it for your own?----If for mine, how can it be, when I must be miserable, if I am forced to marry where I cannot love?-----If for your own, reslect, Sir, on the Selfishness of your Love, and judge it it deserves from me the Return you wish.

How fadly does this Love already operate! You love me so well, that you make me miscrable in the Anger of my dearest Friends!---Your Love has already made them think me undutiful; and instead of the Fondness and Endearment I used to be treated with by them, I meet with nothing but Chidings, Frowns, Slights, and Displeasure.

And what is this Love of yours to do for me hereafter?---Why hereafter, Sir, it will be turned to Hatred, or Indifference at least: For then, tho' I cannot give you my Heart, I shall have given you a Title to it, and you will have a lawful Claim to its Allegiance. May it not then, nav, ought it not to be treated on the Foot of a Rebel, and expect Punishment as such, instead of Tenderness? Even were I to be treated with Mercy, with Goodness, with Kindness by you, and could not deserve or return it, what a Wretch would your Love make me! How would it involve me in the crying Sin of Ingratitude! How would it destroy my Reputation in the World's Eye, that the best of Husbands had the worst of Wives!----The kindest of Men, the unkindest of Women!

I 4

Cease then, I beseech you, this hopeless, this cruel Pursuit !--- Make fome worthier Person happy with your Addresses, that can be happy in them! ---- By this means, you will restore me (if you decline as of your own Motion) to the Condition you found me in, the Love of my Parents, and the Esteem of my Friends. If you really love me, this may be a hard Task; but it will be a most generous one---- And there is some Reason to expect it; for who, that truly loves, wishes to make the Object of his Love miserable? This must I be, if you perfift in your Address; and I shall know by your Conduct on Occasion of this uncommon Request, how to confider it, and in what Light to place you, either as the most generous, or the most ungenerous of Men. Mean time I am, Sir, moit heartily, tho' I cannot be what you would have me,

Your Well-wisher, and humble Servant.

le

LETTER CXXXIV.

The Gentleman's Answer to the Lady's uncommon Request.

Dear Madam,

I AM exceedingly concern'd, that I cannot be as acceptable to you, as I have the good Fortune to find myself to your honour'd Parents. If,

Madam,

Madam, I had Reason to think it was owing to your Prepossession in some happier Man's Favour, I should utterly despair of it, and should really think it would be unjust to my felf, and ungenerous to you, to continue my Address. As therefore you have, by your Appeal to me, in so uncommon a way, endeayour'd to make me a Party against myself, and I have shewn so much Regard to you, as to be willing to oblige you, as far as I can, may I not hope the Favour of you to declare generously, whether I owe my Unhappiness to such a Prepossession, and whether your Heart is given to some other?----If this be the Case, you shall find all you wish on my Part; and I shall take a Pride to plead against myfelf, let me suffer ever so much by it, to your Father and Mother: But if not, and you have taken any other Difgusts to my Person or Behaviour, that there may be Hope my utmost Affection and Affiduity, or a contrary Conduct, may, in time, get the better of, let me implore you to permit me still to continue my zealous Respects to you; for this I will fay, that there is not a Man in the World who can address you with a fincerer and more ardent Flame, than, dear Madam,

Your affectionate Admirer, and humble Servant.

LETTER CXXXV.

The Lady's Reply, in case of a Prepossession.

SIR.

Thank you for your kind Assurance, that you will befriend me in the manner I wish; and I think I owe it to your Generofity to declare, that there is a Person in the World, that, might I be left to my own Choice, I should prefer to all other Men.

Men. To this, Sir, it is owing, that your Address cannot meet with the Return it might otherwise deserve from me. Yet are Things so circumstanc'd, that while my Friends prefer you, and know nothing of the other, I should find it very difficult to obtain their Consents. But your generous Discontinuance, without giving them the true Reason for it, will lay an Obligation greater than I can express, on

Your most humble Servant.

LETTER CXXXVI.

The Lady's Reply in case of no Prepossession, or that she chuses not to avow it.

SIR,

I AM forry to fay, that my Disapprobation of your Address is insuperable --- Yet I cannot but think myfelf beholden to you for the Generofity of your Answer to my earnest Request. I must beg you, Sir, to give over your Application: But how can I fay, while I cannot help being of this Mind, that it is or is not owing to Prepoffession; when you declare, that in the one Inflance (and that is very generous too) you will oblige me; but in the other you will not? If I cannot return Love for Love, be the Motive what it will, pray, Sir, for your own fake, as well as mine, discontinue your Address ---In case of Prepossession, you say you can, and you will oblige me: Let my Unworthiness, Sir, have the same Effect upon you, as if that Preposeffion were to be avow'd. This will inspire me with a Gratitude that will always make me

Your most obliged Servant.

oi le

R

LETTER CXXXVII.

A Lady to a Gentleman of superior Fortune, who, after a long Address in an honourable way, proposes to live with her as a Gallant.

SIR,

u

T

e

71

u

e

178

1.

AFTER many unaccountable Hesitations, and concealed Meanings, that your Mind seem'd of late big with, but hardly knew how to express, you have, at last, spoken out all your Mind; and I know what I am to trust to! I have that Disdain of your Proposal that an honest Mind ought to have. But I wish, for my own sake (and I will say, for yours too, because your Honour is concern'd in it so deeply), that I had had, at my first Acquaintance with you, such an Instance of your Plain-dealing, or, rather, Baseness: Then I should have had no Regret in letting you know how much I scorn'd the Proposer, and the Proposal: Tho' I hope, as it is, a little Time and Resection will make me, for the sake of the latter, abhor the former.

However, Sir, I must say, you are very cruel to use me thus, after you had, by all the alluring Professions of an honourable Love, inspired me with a grateful Return, and brought me to the Freedom of owning it----Nor yet will I be an Hypocrite, or deny my honest Passion; for that would be to lessen your Guilt. God is my Witness, I lov'd you beyond all your Sex; yet I lov'd you virtuous? I lov'd you because I thought you virtuous. And now, tho' it may take some Time, and too much Regret, to get over; yet do I hope, your Behavious will enable me to conquer my fond Folly.

Un-

Ungenerous Man! to take Advantage of your fuperior Fortune to infult me thus, when you had gained my Affections! What, tho' I am not bles'd with a worldly Circumstance equal to what you might expect in a Wife, can you think my Mind so base as to submit to be yours on unworthy Terms? Go, unworthy Man, and make your Court to Miss Reynolds, as you feem to threaten. She has a Fortune equal to your own, and may you be happy together! I should have been so, had I never known you. I never deceived you: You knew my scanty Fortune, and yet pretended to prefer me to all my Sex.

On me you might have laid the highest Obligation, by raifing me to a Condition I was humble enough to think above me; and I should have been, on that Account, all Gratitude, all Duty, all Acknowlegement. On Miss Reynolds you will confer none; her Fortune will quit Scores with yours, and you must both, in your Union, be Strangers to the inexpressible Pleasure of receiving or conferring of Benefits: But this is a Pleasure which none but generous Minds can tafte. That yours is not so, witness your detested Proposal, after fuch folemn Professions of faithful and honourable Love. And I have one Confolation, tho' a Consolation I did not wish for, that I am under no Obligation, but the contrary, to fuch a Man: And am as much your Superior, as the Person who would do no Wrong, is to one that will do nothing elfe. Send me, however, my Letters, that I may be affured my fond Credulity will not be the Subject of fresh Insult, and that perhaps to the Person that shall be what you made me expect I should be. I will fend you all yours, the last only excepted. Which, as it may affift me to conquer my fond Folly for you, I hope you'll allow allow me to keep, tho' it is the Abhorr'd of my Soul---- May you be happier than you have made me!---is the last Prayer you will have from Your too credulous Well-wisher.

LETTER CXXXVIII.

A Father to a Daughter in Service, on hearing of her Master's attempting her Virtue.

My dear Daughter,

it

e

I Understand, with great Grief of Heart, that vour Master has made some Attempts on your Virtue, and yet that you stay with him. God grant that you have not already yielded to his base Desires! For when once a Person has so far forgotten what belongs to himself, or his Character, as to make fuch an Attempt, the very Continuance with him, and in his Power, and under the fame Roof, is an Encouragement to him to profecute his Deligns. And if he carries it better, and more civil, at present, it is only the more certainly to undo you when he attacks you next. Confider, my dear Child, your Reputation is all you have to trust to. And if you have not already, which God forbid! yielded to him, leave it not to the Hazard of another Temptation; but come away directly (as you ought to have done on your own Motion) at the Command of

Your grieved and indulgent Father.

LETTER CXXXIX.

The Daughter's Answer.

Honoured Father,

I Received your Letter Yesterday, and am sorry I stay'd a Moment in my Master's House after his vile Attempt. But he was so sull of his Promises of never offering the like again, that I hop'd I might believe him; nor have I yet seen any thing to the contrary: But am so much convinced, that I ought to have done as you say, that I have this Day left the House; and hope to be with you soon after you will have receiv'd this Letter. I am

Your dutiful Daughter.

bo

abl

eaf

YOU

cru

LETTER CXL.

To a Gentleman of Fortune, who has Children, dissuading him from a Second Marriage with a Lady much younger than himself.

Worthy Sir,

YOU are pleased to inform me of your Thoughts in relation to a Change of your Condition, and to command me to give you freely my Opinion of the Conveniencies and Inconveniencies, that may follow from the Inequality of Years between you, and the young Lady you think of making your second Wife. Indeed I am so much concerned for your Happiness, that had I heard of such your Intention, and had not your Commands to be free on this Head, I think I should have run the Risque

Risque of being thought impertinent and officious, rather than not have expostulated with you on this Occasion. My Objections, Sir, are not so much to the Gaiety of the Lady, as to her Youth, and the Children you have already by your late excellent Lady: And when you remember, that Miss Fanny, your eldest Daughter, is near as old as the Lady you think to make her Mother; I beg, Sir, you will consider, how your Reputation, as to Prudence, will suffer in the Eye of the World without you, as well as the Look it will have to your Children and Domesticks.

ts

1,

n

at 15 nch

to

he

ue

Nature, Justice, Decency, and every Branch of human Prudence, plead strongly against the Union of lively Youth with maturer Years. Her Temper may be very agreeable: So, indeed, is yours---- But may they be so to each other, when they meet together in fo close an Union? You are yet bleft with a good State of Health; but can you expect, that it will be always fo? --- Or rather, will not every Year take from your Constitution, what it will add to hers, for feveral Years to come? Your Years make you ferious and folemn, and you are past a Relish for those Pleasures and Amusements, which are but fuitable to hers, and which at the same Age you yourself delighted in. Can you recal Time past? Will it become you to resume the Part which Judgment has made you quit? How aukwardly, if you attempt it, will you do this! What Censure will this subject you to! How will it embolden the gay young Fellows to make Attempts, that may, notwithstanding the most unexceptionable Conduct in the Lady, give you great Uneafiness!

If you cannot join in the innocent Gaieties which you have long difused, it would be, in some measure, cruel, to deprive a young Lady of her Share of them, at an Age that will naturally make her expect and require them: And yet will not even innocent Liberties be Matter of Reproach to her, and Uneafiness to you, if she takes them without you? And would you chuse to bear her Company, and indulge a young-old Tafte for gay Scenes long contemn'd, and fo appear in a Light, to all that beheld you together, either as her Father, or her jealous Keeper, and make it look to the World as if you your felf doubted her Virtue out of your own Presence? Suppose the Scene at a gallant Comedy, that fprightly free Joke which will make her smile, will make you frown; and fo on in every other Scene of Life and Amusement between you. For a Defeet or Inequality, of whatever kind, whenever a Man is conscious of it, let him carry it off as he may, will always be present with him, and, like another Conscience, stare him in the Face.

Your Fortune, 'tis true, is so considerable, that you may amply provide for all your Children, and yet make it worth a young Lady's while, who would study her Interest, preferably to any other Consideration, to oblige you: But, Sir, let me ask you, Can you, who lived so happily with your late dear Lady, and had fuch constant Proofs of her inviolable Affection to your Person, content yourfelf with a counterfeit Passion, a mere felfish Affection, in a Wife? And can you think, that so young a Lady can love you, like her who grew on in Life, in Hope, in Desires, with you; and who, from a reciprocal Youth passed agreeably together, grew equally mature, and had both but one View between you; to wit, a young Family growing up, the common Offspring of your mutual Affections; and who were the binding, and, fo long as her Life lasted, the indisfoluble Cement of your Loves and your Interests? ---- If she can, she will be a Conha can ter can the Con

Acceptains and Point Cufe have I with with shall

Sir,

I W Su it: A equall not, h judge first pl (to say a Contradiction to all Experience, and you will be happy against all reasonable Expectation----If she cannot, will you be content with a selfish, an interested Civility, instead of true Love; and which cannot possibly so much as look like Love, but by the Dissimulation and Hypocrisy of your Bosom

Companion?

When I look back on what I have written, I begin to be afraid of your Displeasure on a double Account, for the Nature, and for the Length of this Epistle, tho' you have commanded me to speak my Mind. Yet having several other material Points to touch upon, and relying upon your Excuse for my good Intentions (for what View can I have in the Liberty I take, but your Happiness?), I will beg Leave to pursue the Subject in another Letter; and to conclude this, tho' a little abruptly, with the Assurance, that (as you request) nobody shall see what I write but yourself; and that I am, Sir,

Your affectionate humble Servant.

LETTER CXLI.

The same Subject pursued.

SIR,

I WILL now take the Liberty to continue my Sulject, and my humble Expostulations upon it: And I will suppose two Cases very, if not equally, probable; to wit, that you may, or may not, have Children by your new Lady; and to judge in both Cases, how the Happiness of your remaining Life may be affected by either. In the first place, if you should have Children by her to say nothing of the Misunderstandings and Jealousies lousies this may create between your Lady, and your present Children, which may greatly affect your own Happiness), are you so well able to support, at these Years, with Credit and Satisfaction, that Character which so peculiarly befits a young Husband to a young Wise? And will it not naturally strike you, that your own Children by that time will make a better Figure in such a Circumstance than yourself? Will you be so well able to go thro' the same Troubles, the same Anxieties, the same Hopes, Fears and Affections, both to the pregnant Mother, and afterwards to the Insant Progeny, that you have so happily got over? And will not what was then called laudable Love, be now deem'd Dotage and Uxoriousness?

Providence feems to have defign'd the youthful Portion of a Man's Life, for mutual Endearments, and Propagation of his Family; the maturer Part, for Education, Counfel or Advice. And will you, Sir, invert the Design of it? Will you call back the Days of Sense, into the Years of Intellect; watch over the Baby in the Cradle, when you should form the Mind of the grown Person?----How unequal will you be to this Part, to what you once were !---- As you will not have the fame Difpositions about you, you cannot have the same Joy at a pleasing Incident; but will have possibly a superadded Weight of Sorrow on any fad Event, as Years will have added to your Reflection, as Experience will have contracted your Hope, and as you will have feen the Vanity of all worldly Expectations.

Then, my dear Sir, confider, if you should even get over this resumed Province happily, and have no material Uneasiness from the Lady, on the Account I have intimated to you; is it not too probable, that you may not live to see this young Race brought up? And if you should, what Animosities, n th be you

ha

the har Di wil not.

whi

may very Chil then Its diffe Min

ferior
and fuch this i quain
Diver

for A House
good of the I scious if ther think, will T

ni- trarily,

mosities, what Uneasinesses may not ensue, from the different Interests into which your Family will be divided! And it may, moreover, be possible for you to have Grandchildren older than some of your own by your new Lady.

But if we suppose, that the Occasion for this may happen, will the Matter be mended by it?----All young Ladies expect and wish for Children, when they marry. If she should not have any, she will hardly be induced to think it her Fault; but the Difference of Years will tell her, and all the World will join in it, where to lay the Blame, deferved or not. She will, for want of so necessary an Employment, look abroad for Amusements and Diversions, which, however innocent in her first Intentions, may not always end so; and if they do, will be very unsuitable to your Disposition and Liking. Childbed matronizes the giddiest Spirits, and brings them to Reflection sooner than any other Event. Its Consequences fill up the Time, and introduce different Scenes of Pleasure and Amusement in the Mind of a Lady. It draws her Attention to more serious Affairs, it domesticates her, as I may say, and makes her affociate with graver Persons, and fuch as are in the same Scenes of Life. But where this is not, she continues her youthful and giddy Acquaintance, classes herself, as to her Company and Diversions, as if in the single State still, and looks for Amusements out of berself, and out of her House: And you will be obliged to connive at a good deal more than you otherwise would, because the Difference of Years will give as much Consciousness to you, as it will Presumption to her; and It there be any Grievance between you, she'll think, after all you can do, it is of her Side. Nor will Time and Years mend the Matter; but, contrarily, make it worse and worse. Then

Then another Inconvenience may arise: The Lady, if she has no Children by you, to prevent lying at the Mercy of yours, as the will call it, will be making a feparate Interest to herself: She will grow upon your Indulgence and Fondness; she will cajole, she will reproach, she will teize you into Acts of Bounty and Profusion to her. She will endeavour to build up a Fortune out of yours, to the Prejudice of your Family. And all this for what End?---Only to make her a rich Widow, and to give her Opportunity to triumph, in Conjunction, perhaps, with some young Rake or Profligate, over your Ashes, and to make Comparisons grievous to Reflection, at the Expence of your Fortune and Memory, in the new Man's Favour.

Forgive me, dear Sir, these free Hints. My full Mind, which is thus ready to overflow thro' the Zeal I have for your Honour and Welfare, fuggests many more to me, which your cool Reflection will not want. And I have been already so prolix, that I will only farther fay, that I am, and shall ever be,

Your faithful and most affectionate Friend and Servant.

LETTER CXLII.

Against a Second Marriage, where there are Children on both Sides.

Dear Sir,

YOU ask my Opinion as to the Thoughts you have entertained of making your Addresses to the Widow Lockyer. Do you really ask it with an Intent to take it? Or, like the Generality of the World, only in hopes, that my Judgment, falling in ha ou tro wh the cen

con

Side

whe to fa You both a Fr do p gethe thefe worfe

from

It

the C That the ha round That : present. Man, was a 1 an affec very we right; it than I more ur of a ha

But

with your own, may be a kind of Justification or Excuse for what you intend to do, and are, perhaps, already resolved upon? If so, what do you do, but lay a Snare for me, which may put an End to our Friendship? For Men least of all bear Controul or Contradiction in Points of this Nature, when their Hearts are actually determined; and then Indifference begins, and Disgust ends the best-cemented Friendships.

To fay the Truth, I never was a Friend to Second Marriages, where there are Children on one Side, and a Likelihood of more; but, especially, where there are Children on both. I have nothing to say, as to the Person or Character of the Lady. You, whom it most concerns, are well satisfy'd of both, or you would not have gone so far, as to ask a Friend's Advice on this Occasion: But since you do put it to me, I will throw a few Reasons together, which have always had Weight with me on these Occasions; and I hope, you'll not think the worse of your Friend, if he happen to differ a little from your own Judgment.

re

ou

to an

the rin

vith

It must be confess'd, in the Case you put, That the Circumstances, on both Sides, are pretty equal: That there is no great Disparity in Years: That she has Three Children, and you have Four; a round Family, however, when they come together! That she is very fond of her Children, and you, at present, of yours: That you are not an ill-temper'd Man, and she is a good-temper'd Woman; and was a loving Wise to her late Spouse, as you were an affectionate Husband to yours. Well, so far is very well, and, you'll think perhaps, very promising of a happy Union; and possibly you may think right; at least you have much better Grounds for it than many that do marry upon much worse, and more unequal Prospects.

But confider, Sir, what Security have you, that Perfons who have been always good-temper'd, when they have nothing to thwart or try their Temper, will be still so, when they have something that will? --- Here, at the very Threshold of this Adventure, is a Cause of great Trial; a Trial which neither of you had before, and confequently, which neither of you knew how you shall behave in: She loves her Children. So she ought. You love yours. It is right fo todo. But fee you not, before I speak, that this laudable separate Love of either, may become matter of great Uneafiness to both? You cannot, either of you, possibly expect more than common Civility, and outfide Kindness, from the other, she to yours, you to hers. And it will be happy enough, if this Task do but fufficiently try the Discretion of both.

It is impossible, my Friend, but you must have very different Views on each other .--- A pretty Prospect to set out with in a matrimonial Adventure! Her Praises of her own Children will be very fincere and lavish. Her Praises of yours, if she ever praises, will be very fuspicious and sparing. And perhaps you must be as discreet as possible, in the Praises of your own. The very Cloaths each wear, the Vi-Chuals they eat, nay, the very Looks of either Parent, as they shall appear kind to their own, or referved to the other's, will afford room for inward Heart-burnings, if not outward Janglings. I have feen many Instances of these Kinds.

Their different Capacities; one shall take their Learning, another not--- Their different Tempers; one shall be mild, another insulting; one smooth, another rough---- Their different Ages; which will make one dictate, while the other will not be prescribed to---will all afford Cause of Difference: And when they come to an Age fit for fetting

fet

pre

To

one qui

W

has

fee

body

Unea

and progg

in ord

Occar

live yo this N

two fo

before, lingle I

this do think y

your F

Numbe:

Repose.

full Th

or unfuit

generally

Man tha

for them

they may

great Exp

auther In

Confeque

And

T

will

fetting them out in the World; if Boys, to Apprentice; you put Jackey to a better Trade than Tommy, and give more Money with him! And yet one Trade or Master may apparently deserve or require it; the other, not. If Girls, in Matrimony; Why should Betsey be married before Thomasine?

---Let the Eldest go first! Tho' perhaps the one has an humble Servant, the other none---Ay, I see poor Thomasine must be contented with any body, or any thing, while Betsey must be a Lady!

---These are all still fresh Causes of Difference and Uneasiness to you both.

Then will she actually, or you will suspect it (and that is as bad to your Peace), be constantly progging, as the Women call it, for her Children, in order to make a private Purse for them, on any Occasion that may happen, or in case he shall out-live you.

13

of

i-

2-

e-rd

ive

eir

ers;

oth, nich

not

Dif-

t for

tting

And if there be a third Race of Children from this Marriage, worse and worse still. Then the two former Sets, if they never join'd together before, now will make a common Cause, in this lingle Point, against the new Race; and must not this double your own and your Wife's Comforts, think you?---- Then must you be glad to lessen your Family at home, that you may lessen the Number of fo many Spies and Enemies to your Repose. The Boys must be hurry'd out to the fift Thing that offers for them, whether fuitable or unsuitable to their Genius or Capacity; and they generally thrive accordingly: The Girls to the first Man that will take them, whether he can provide or them or not, as he ought; and after a while they may come back to you, tho' fitted out with a geat Expence, quite destitute and undone, with a ather Increase to your Family; the too frequent Consequences of precipitate Marriages. And then will a new Scene commence; for all the unprovided-for will join against the poor unhappy one.

This, you'll fay, is looking a great way forward. It is fo. And what may never happen. Possibly, it never may, as to the last Case; but as it too often has happen'd, and daily does happen, a wise Man will think a little about it, while it is in his Power to prevent it all.

I have touch'd but upon a few of the Confequences that may too probably follow from a new Engagement. Yet, I believe, these, if you are not absolutely determined, will make you think a little; if you are, why then, all the Reasons that can be urged will fignify nothing. And in this Cafe, you should not have laid a Snare for me to disoblige a Person who is to step in between your Friendship and mine, and who will look upon me (if the knows my Mind, as very probably she will; for I hardly ever knew a Secret of this kind kept) as her Enemy; and so create a Coolness and Indifference between us, which you cannot help, if you would. For if ever it be fo, and your Lady receives me, in a way that I have not been used to in your House, I shall be very shy of visiting either you or her.

If you require it, and it will have any Effect upon you, I can enter still farther into this Subject; but I fanfy I have said enough, and perhaps more than you'll thank me for. But be that as it will, I have answer'd your Request; and shewn you (peradventure, at the Expence of my Discretion), that I am, in all Things,

Your fincere Friend, and Well-wisher.

LET-

fh

je

th

mic

DOV

fona

ther

way:

Chile

more

make

For y

the I Man

ances

but the

are all fuade But think

LETTER CXLIII.

Against a second Marriage, where there are Children on one Side, and a Likelihood of more.

Dear Sir,

e qi

NS.

ly

er

ce

ild.

in I

Feet

ect;

nore

(per-ifter.

ET

YOU are inclined, you tell me, to give your Children a Mother, instead of the good one they have lost; or rather, in plain English, you should have said, yourself a Wise, to supply your own Loss: And you ask my Opinion on the Subject, without naming the Person, only intimating, that she is a maiden Lady, no more than Seven Years younger than yourself, and has a pretty middling Fortune.

I am glad you have not named the Lady; for now I shall stand clear of any Imputation of perfonal Prejudice, let me fay what I will. I will therefore freely tell you my Mind, that I am always against second Marriages, where there are Children on one or both Sides, and likely to be more: Unless there are such worldly Reasons as make it absolutely prudent for a Person to marry to establish his Circumstances. This is not your Case: For you are very easy in the World; and besides, the Ladies of this Age are so brought up, that a Man must not look for very extraordinary Assistances in a Wife, with relation to her own Children, much less the Children of another Woman. Well, but this Lady is highly prudent, good-humour'd, an excellent Oeconomist, and what not? And so they are all, my Friend; or, at least, we are apt to perluade ourselves so, before they are marry'd.

But we'll suppose her all you say, and all you think; yet she will hardly, I presume, be divested of the Passions common to human Nature. Can you expect, that tho' you give your Children a Mother, you give them an own Mother? She may have Prudence enough to do what she will think her Duty by them; but must she not be her own Judge, of what that is ?---And are you fure, that what she calls so, nay, and, for Peace-sake, what you will be willing to call fo too, will be called fo by your Children, as they grow up, and even by the rest of the World? But Children, you'll fay, may be unreasonable, and undutiful---- Very well, Sir---we'll suppose it so; but will this make you happy, let them have Reason, or not, for their Surmifes? And as she cannot plead Nature for the Regulator of her Conduct towards them, but common Civility, and Prudence only, at the very best; will there not be two to one on the Childrens Side, that they may be right? But whoever may be right or wrong, if you are made unhappy by it, that's the effential Point to you, who by this second Marriage have been the Cause of it all.

K

This is most certain, her Views must be quite contrary to those of your Children: 'Tis true, theirs will of Consequence be likewise contrary to hers; and yet both may be very reasonable too, according to the Character of each. And is not this a pretty Situation for you, do you think? For which Side can you, must you take? The Children, as they grow up, will be jealous of ill Offices from her with you. She will interpret those Things which a natural Mother would think nothing of, as studied Slights: And will not their constant Bickerings make you uneasy in your own Family, where Uneasiness is the least tolerable, as it is the Place to which a Man should retire for Comfort, when the World gives him Cause of Displeasure?

And

COU

inft

fhou

ction

it wa

Cafe,

arise

law.

Childr

be still your f

probabl ally carl every t

when th

Clashing

Offsprir

Mothers

ference

those of

Set is pr

T

And what, pray, may this probably end in? Why, for Quietness-sake, you will possibly be obliged to separate them. The Mother-in-law. should she be in Fault, you cannot part with. The Children then must turn out, of course. You must fludy, after reconciling and patching up a hundred Breaches, to make some other Provision for them. And thus, perhaps, they are precipitated into a wide World, and exposed to a thousand dangerous Temptations: And how can you forgive yourfelf, if they should by the means become a Prey to the defigning Attempts, the Boys, of vicious Women; the Girls, of profligate Men? And how would it have grieved the Heart of their indulgent Mother, could she have foreseen, that her beloved Spouse, instead of supplying the Loss of a Mother to them, should take from them his own immediate Protection, and that, perhaps, at a Time of Life when it was most necessary for their future Good?

This may, very probably, be more or less the Case, if there be no other Difficulties than what may arise between your Children and their Mother-inlaw. But if, as is most likely, you should have Children by this your fecond Wife, the Case may be still worse. She will then look upon yours by your first, not only with a more indifferent, but probably with a jealous Eye. She will be continually carking and laying up for her own, and grudge every thing you lay out upon the others. And when they are both grown up to any Bigness, what Clashings and Jarrings may not ensue between the Offspring of the same Father, and two different Mothers! How will you be obliged to give a Preference to the Children of the latter Wife, against those of the former; because the Mother of the one et is present and partial, and perhaps clamorous,

te

e,

to ic-

his

or en,

om.

ings

f, as ker-here

ce to n the

And

in their Favour --- that of the other, absent, filent, dead, forgotten!

If Love hides a Multitude of Faults, as no doubt it does, and Indifference, or, perhaps, as it may be, Hatred, is quick-fighted to every little Slip, how will hers be all Angels! Yours----the worst she can call them!----Yet how can you help this? You are married to the Temper, as well as to the Woman; and Opposition, 'tis likely, will but make matters worse; for what the Sex cannot carry by Reason or Argument, they will by Obstinacy and Teizing.

Then in the Matter of making Provision respectively for their suture Good, how will your Solicitudes for the one be constantly lessened; for the other perpetually importun'd! Nor must your own Judgment, in either Case, be so much the Rule of your Conduct, as the sond Partiality of your second Wise for hers. And it is far from being impossible, that she may use your first Children worse than she would do mere Strangers, for no other Reason, but because they have a better Title to your Regard, and stand more in the way of her Interest and Views.

These, my good Friend, are some of the Reasons I have to allege against second Marriages, where there are Children on one Side, and a Probability of having a second Race. As I hinted, there may be Reasons, where a Person's Circumstances stand in need of the Assistance that may be procur'd by this means, to overbalance many of the Inconveniencies I have hinted at. The lesser Evil, in this Case, is to be chosen, and the Party must make the best of the rest. But this is not your Case: And so I refer the Whole to your mature Confederation, and am, Sir, Sincerely yours.

LET

W

tha

an

mei

and to fi

let n

Sum

Tim

parat.

you w

Seven

which

by of

Adage

your .

ment.

notwi

may h

Th Sign i

LETTER CXLIV.

Advising a Friend against going to Law.

Dear Sir,

it

d,

1d

ons ere ity nay

and

l by

-570

this

nake

onfi

151014

AM forry to hear, that the Difference between you and Mr. Archer is at last likely to be brought to a Law-suit. I wish you'd take it into your serious Consideration before you begin, because it will hardly be in your Power to end it, when you please. For you immediately put the Matter out of your own Hands, into the Hands of those whose Interest it is to protract the Suit from Term to Term, and who will as absolutely prescribe to you in it, as your Physician in a dangerous Illness.

The Law, my good Friend, I look upon, more than any one thing, as the proper Punishment of an over-hafty and perverse Spirit, as it is a Punishment that follows an Act of a Man's own feeking and chufing. You will not confent, perhaps, now to submit the Matter in Dispute to Reference; but let me tell you, that, after you have expended large Sums of Money, and squandered away a deal of Time in Attendance on your Lawyers, and Preparations for Hearings, one Term after another, you will probably be of another Mind, and be glad Seven Years hence to leave it to that Arbitration which now you refuse. He is happy who is wife by other Mens Misfortunes, fays the common Adage: And why, when you have heard from all your Acquaintance, who have try'd the Experiment, what a grievous Thing the Law is, will you, notwithstanding, pay for that Wisdom, which you may have at the Cost of others?

The Representation that was once hung up as a Sign in the Rolls Liberty, on one Side, of a Man

K

all in Rags wringing his Hands, with a Label, importing, That he had lost his Suit; and on the other, a Man that had not a Rag left, but stark naked, capering and triumphing, That he had carry'd his Cause*; was a fine Emblem of going to Law, and the infatuating Madness of a litigious Spirit.

How excellent to this Purpose is the Advice of our Blessed Saviour, rather than seek this Reares against any who would even take one's Coat, to give him his Cloak also! For, besides the Christian Doctrine inculcated by this Precept, it will be found, as the Law is managed, and the Uncertainty that attends, even in the best-grounded Litigations, that such a pacifick Spirit may be deemed the only way to preserve the rest of one's Garments, and to prevent being stript to the Skin.

Moreover, what wife Man would rush upon a Proceeding, where the principal Men of the Profession (tho' the Oath they take, if Serj --- nts, obliges them not to fign a sham Plea, nor plead in a Cause against their own Opinion) are not ashamed, under the specious, but scandalous Notion, of doing the best they can for their Client, to undertake, for the fake of a paltry Fee, to whiten over the blackest Cause, and to deseat the justest? Where your Property may depend altogether upon the Impudence of an eloquent Pleader afferting any thing, a perjured Evidence swearing whatever will do for his Suborner's Purpose? Where the Tricks and Mistakes of Practifers, and want of trisling Forms, may Nonfuit you? Where Deaths of Persons made Parties to the Suit may cause all to begin again? What wife Man, I fay, would fub-

pr

10

4t.

6:1

ma

als

or .

Err

Gul

Anfi

bitan

a Lin

contr

Train Bills

nence

Exce Repli

1

^{* &#}x27;Tis faid, That Sir John Tr—, Master of the Rolls, caused this Sign to be taken down, on the Clamour it occasion'd among the Lawyers.

when

ject himself to these Vexations and common Incidents in the Law, if he could any way avoid it; together with the intolerable Expences and Attendances consequent on a Law-suit? Besides, the Fears, the Cares, the Anxieties, that revolve with every Term, and engross all a Man's Thoughts? Where legal Proofs must be given to the plainest Facts; that a living Man is living, and identically himself; and that a dead Man is dead, and buried by Certificate; where Evidence must be brought at a great Expence to Hands and Seals affixed to Deeds and Receipts, that never were before question'd; till a Cause shall be split into several Underones; thefe try'd Term by Term; and Years elapfe before the main Point comes to be argued, tho' originally there was but one fingle Point, as you apprehended, in the Question. As to the Law-part only, observe the Process: First, comes the Declaration; 2dly, a Plea; 3dly, Demurrer to the Plea; 4thly, a Joinder in Demurrer; 5thly, a Rejoinder; 6thly, a Sur-rejoinder; which fometimes is conclulive, fometimes to begin all over again. may succeed Tryals upon the Law Part, and Tryals upon the Equity Part; oftentimes new Tryals, or Rehearings; and these followed by Writs of Error.

Then you may be plung'd into the bottomless Gulf of Chancery, where you begin with Bills and Answers, containing Hundreds of Sheets at exorbitant Prices, 15 Lines in a Sheet, and 6 Words in a Line (and a Stamp to every Sheet), barefacedly so contrived to pick your Pocket: Then follow all the Train of Examinations, Interrogatories, Exceptions, Bills amended, References for Scandal and Impertinence, new Allegations, new Interrogatories, new Exceptions, on Pretence of insufficient Answers, Replies, Rejoinders, and Sur-rejoinders; till, at last,

K 4

e

1-7 4

or ad

S, ns

eb-

the la-

ect

when you have danced thro' this bleffed Round of Preparation, the Hearing before the Master of the Rolls comes next; Appeals follow from his Honour to the Chancellor; then from the Chancellor to the House of Lords; and sometimes the Parties are sent down from thence for a new Tryal in the Courts below----Good Heavens! What wise Man, permit me to repeat, would enter himself into this consounding Circle of the Law?----

I hope, dear Sir, you will think of this Matter most deliberately, before you proceed in your present angry Purpose; and if you shall judge it proper to take my Advice, and avoid a Law-suit, I am sure you will have Reason to thank me for it, and for the Zeal wherewith I am

Your fincere Friend and Servant.

LETTER CXLV.

To a young Lady, cautioning her against keeping Company with a Gentleman of a bad Character.

Dear Coufin,

THE great Respect I have, and always had for you, obliges me to take this Freedom, to let you know, that the Neighbourhood begins to talk pretty freely of you and Mr. Lory. You have been seen with him at the Play, and, after that, at the R---- Tavern, a House of no good Repute, I assure you; where you have staid with him till near Twelve o'Clock at Night: You have likewise been with him at Vipont's in Hampstead, at Vaux-hall, Cuper's-gardens, Mary-le-bon, &c.

I am forry for these Things, because he has none of the best of Characters; having, as I am well inform'd, already ruin'd Two, if not Three, worthy Tradesmens Daughters: And it is but too probable, that he has no honourable Design upon you: For, whatever he may promise you, I am credibly affur'd, that he is actually engaged with Miss Knapper, whom you know very well: Indeed, it is faid, he has 200 l. per Ann. but if it be so, he is very much involved in the World; and, at the Rate he lives, had he three times that Estate, would never be out of Debt; for he is downright extravagant, a Man of no Conduct, a perfect Rattle, whose Words are not to be rely'd on in any respect; and makes a common Boaft of the Favours he has receiv'd from our Sex, whose faulty Fondness is the constant Subject of his Ridicule.

For all these Reasons, I beg of you, dear Cousin, to avoid his Company; for the I am consident you will preserve your Virtue, yet, my Dear, think what you will, you may receive an incurable Wound in your Reputation. I hope you'll excuse this Liberty, which no other Motive but Zeal for your Credit and Welfare has occasioned. And believe me to be Your faithful Friend,

as well as affectionate Kinfwoman.

LETTER CXLVI.

From a Mother to her high-spirited Daughter, who lives on uneasy Terms with her Husband.

Dear Nanny,

or et lk en

he ear

en

all,

am

I AM forry, with all my Heart, to hear of the frequent Missunderstandings between your Husband and you. I hoped much better things from K 5 your Prudence. From my Prudence, you'll fav perhaps! as if I thought all the Fault was yours: But, my Dear, I don't think fo, I can't think fo; and yet I may find Fault with your want of Prudence too: For Prudence will oblige a good Wife to bear a little Contradiction from her Husband, tho' not always just, perhaps, as well as to avoid giving Offence. Suppose he is peevish, petulant, uneasy in his Temper, and on slight or no Occafions, as you may think; must you be peevish and petulant, because he is so? How do you know what Things may have happened to him abroad, in the way of his Business, to make him so?----Or, if it be only Humour, why must you be as bad as he that you find Fault with? Is an ill Temper in a Hufband, fo taking a thing, that the Wife, who finds it intolerable to her, must nevertheless imitate or assume it?

W

yo

bec

Wi

tha

W

for

Wei

you

Hun

dien

are n

not 1

lions

your

Cong

cont

tradi

But

I

The Reason why you will not allow him to be oftener in the Right, and why you condemn as causeless his Petulance and Waspishness, must proceed, in a great measure, from a slender Opinion, if not Contempt, of his Judgment. If you think him a Man of Sense, 'tis impossible but you should allow, that there may be fome Caufe, tho' you don't immediately penetrate it, why he should be diffurbed; and it would be kind in you to suppose the best; as, that his Tenderness for you will not let him communicate it to you, rather than to imagine he is always in the wrong, and always angry without Reason. But were it actually to be so, are you commissioned to punish him with Provocations and Refentments as wrong, and even more unbecoming in a Wife? If you love him as you ought, you will extenuate his Failings, and draw into an advantageous Light those Actions which may be interpreted in his Favour.

mour,

But if, as I heard you once say, you will give him as good as he brings; that you will not bear his unaccountable Humours, and such-like vulgar and provoking Expressions; it must come to this Point: Either you or he must give way; one of your Tempers must be subdued, and over-aw'd by the other. If it be his Case, tir'd out by your resolute and sturdy Behaviour, to succumb, do you think this will either be a Credit to him or to you? What an abject (henpeck'd, the Vulgar call it) Wretch will he be deem'd! What a Termagant you! He'll be the Jest of his Companions, and you be thought to excel---in what? In a Quality the most infamous to a Woman, next to that of an Adultress.

But this I aver, that Meekness, Condescension, Forbearance, are so far from being despisable Qualities in our Sex, that they are the Glory of it. And what is Meekness, my Dear, if you are not to be try'd by Provocations? What is Condescension, if you must always have your own way? What is Forbearance, if you are to return Injury for Injury, with the hostile Spirit of a fierce Enemy, rather than to act with the sweet Complacency of a tender Wise, who has vow'd Obedience and Duty?

d

u

e

t

0,

an-

it,

an n-

But

But, Obedience and Duty, you'll fay, in Return for ill Nature and ill Usage! Yes, my Dear, even were it to be so, you ought. For, do you think you are never to condescend, or give up your own Humour to your Husband? A pretty Sort of Obedience that, which shall be only shewn where you are not thwarted, but never where you are! Would not this be Obedience to your own headstrong Passions, and not to him?----So long as you can have your way in every thing, you will be a Mirror of Condescension; but when once you come to be contradicted, why then you are at Liberty to contradicted, again. If he is out of the way in his Humour, you will never be in the way in yours. If he gives you one unkind Word, he shall have two in Return; for you will give him as good as he brings. If he is passionate, you will be so too. You will return provoking Answers for reslecting Words; and so make your House a constant Scene of Consusion, and your Life uncomfortable. And for what? Why to shew how bravely you can return Injury for Injury; how nobly you can contend for Victory over your Husband; and how you can make him despised in his Family, as well by Children as Servants, and yourself discredited by the poor Victory, suppose you were to win it by breaking his Spirit.

K 6

Is this, my Dear, the Part of a tender Wife to a Husband? Nay, is it the Part of a Christian to a Christian, where there is not the matrimonial Obligation? For are we not commanded to return Good for Evil, and to pray for them that despightfully use us? ---- And is not the Wife's Conversation to be coupled with Fear? And do we not vow Reverence to a Husband as our Head? --- How can all this be, if you are to return Evil for Evil, to make yourfelf your own Judge, and Jury, and Executioner too, by acquitting yourfelf, condemning him, fentencing him, and punishing him with all the Severity of licentious Speech, provoking Snappishness, or the still more affecting Deportment of sullen contemptuous Silence? Let me, on the Whole, befeech you, for my fake, who would be loth to be thought to have fet you any bad Example, for your Family's fake, for your Reputation's fake, as well as his, to resolve on a different Conduct. Make the good Rule yours, of never being out of Humour when he is fo. First soften him by good Temper; then, when foften'd, expostulate mildly on the Unreasonableness of his Anger. If you convince him thus,

be can

to tha

002

thus, he will take care of the like Error; or his present Confession will strengthen your mild Arguments against him in any thing else for the future. He will see you advise him for his Good. He will have a greater Opinion of your Prudence, and be more doubtful of his own. He will fee you contend not for Victory, or Contradiction-fake; but for his own fake. And depend upon it, you will both reap the happy Fruits of it in the Comfort of your Lives: in the Love of your own Children; in the Reverence of your Servants (who will otherwise be listed in each Contender's Quarrel, and be infolent Judges of the Conduct of both); in the Respect of your Neighbours and Friends; and in the Pleasure you will give to your Relations, who will vifit and be visited by you both, with that Delight which nobody knows how to estimate so much, as, my dear Nanny,

Your ever-affectionate Mother.

LETTER CXLVII.

A Lady to her Friend, a young Widow Lady, who, having bury'd a polite and excellent Husband, inclines to marry a less deserving Gentleman, and of unequal Fortune.

Dear Madam,

n ll ce

er

1-

eſs, en

le,

be

our,

the

er; Un-

him

hus

WERE I to lay it down for a Maxim, that Maids often mend their Circumstances by Marriage, Widows very rarely, I believe I might be justify'd by every one's Experience. To what can the Truth of this Observation be owing? Is it to be supposed, that Widows have stronger Passions than Maids? Shall the proud lordly Sex have it to boast, that they are such estimable Creatures, that when when once one of them has had the Fortune to be chosen by a Lady, and has been taken from her by Death, the cannot live without taking another, and finds herfelf obliged to accept of the next that offers, thro' all Disadvantages, and every Degree of Inequality? Surely this cannot be the Cafe! Surely a prudent, a modest Lady, will not fay this, in fo many Words ! ---- Much less, then, ought she to eonfefs it by her Actions, which are much stronger than Words. For I believe no Woman who ever enter'd the Pale of Matrimony with sprightly Hopes about her, found the Possession (Sex only consider'd) equal to her Expectations. The Maid may hope, may fanfy much, in the Commerce between the Sexes, from her meditating on the heighten'd Scenes which pernicious Novels, and idle Romances, the Poison of Female Minds, abound with. But the Widow knows 'tis all Free-masonry, all empty Hope, flashy, foolish, unworthy, unpermanent, and, but for the Law of Nature, despicable .--- Whence is it then, that the wishing, expecting Maid, should be more prudent than the knowing, experienced Widow? Should be better Proof, with raifed Imaginations, against Courtship or Persuasion, than one who well knows the transitory Vanity and Unsatisfactoriness of the End to which that Courtship or Perfuation tends?

If it be faid, That this Point is not so much the Case, as the settled Life of Matrimony, which has been once so satisfactorily experienced; let the Circumstances of a Lady who abounds in every thing, answer this poor, but common Excuse; and let the Choice she makes of the Person and Fortune of her second Husband (which is generally, as I have observed above, in both Cases, far short of her former Choice) acquit or convict her, as her Conduct shall deserve.

If

of

ha

ma

ma

not if f

the

a m

the and

Ball

Partie Bend

much verfall

Dece

Gene

If a young Widow, indeed, advantages herfelf, and worsts not her Children (if she has any), in her fecond Adventure, let her proceed: She is justified to worldly Prudence. But this, as I have faid, is so seldom the Case, even with Widow Ladies of Modesty, and Discretion in other respects, that I must own I have been often puzzled and confounded how to account for the Motives of fuch an one, reputably; especially when she-appears to me and all the World, neither to have done Honour to the Memory of her late Spouse, to her Family, to herself, nor, as sometimes has been the Case, paid any regard to common Decency. How, I fay, shall this be accounted for, in a Lady of Prudence and Virtue? Is it, that, as one Extreme is faid to border on another, extreme Joy treads on the Heels of extreme Sorrow? It cannot be; for as, on one hand, I am fure there can be no extreme Joy in the matrimonial Commerce; fo, I fear, where a Woman can foon forget her departed Spouse, she cannot be sensible of extreme Grief for his Loss. if the will take upon her this latter Part of the Character, and own the first was thus indifferent to her, the shall have my Consent to do any thing she has a mind to do, and I will exempt her willingly from the Observation of every other Rule of Prudence and Decency.

But in a Case the direct Reverse of this, how shall we account for such a Behaviour? How, in particular, if the charming, the blooming Miss Bendish, who was so coy a Maiden, and with so much Difficulty won by the late amiable and conversable Mr. Brookes, with a Fortune superior to her own, should, within a few Months after his Decease, when blest with an Affluence left her by his Generosity and Affection for her, be won by Mr.

r

e

15

1-57

10

of

ve

)r-ict

If

Founes.

Fownes, a Man less accomplish'd as to Knowlege, less amiable in his Person, less polite in his Converfation, and of a Fortune fo much beneath what was even her maiden one, that her Friends then would never have thought him worthy of her?---How. I fay, shall we account for this, if it should be so? Is there a fecret Sympathy in Tempers and Dispositions, that attracts each its Like by Motives imperceptible, and unaccountable? It cannot be in this Case, surely. For can the polite Mrs. Brookes be less polite for having been marry'd to one of the best-bred and best-behav'd Gentlemen in England? And can she so soon get over Forms as a Widow, for fuch a Suitor as Mr. Fownes, which as a Maid were fo long before they could be dispensed with in Favour of such a Lover as Mr. Brookes?----Is her foft and delicate Mind, as we all think it, after all, more on a Level with that of the one Gentleman, than that of the other far more excellent one? Has the, will the Licentious ask, stronger Incentives to a married State as a Widow, than she had as a Maid? ----It cannot be !----What then shall we say to all this?---For after all, two Years won not Miss Bendish, to a Gentleman of exalted Worth; and two Months feem to have made a great Progress with Mrs. Brookes !---- And that in Favour of a Gentleman, whom we all think unworthy of her at all.

My dear Bosom-friend, my School-fellow, my Companion, as well in the maiden as in the matrimonial, tho', I bless God, not in the vidual State, resolve me these Questions; answer to me for this Conduct; account to me for these seeming unaccountable Motives; and thereby justify yourself to your Reputation, to the Memory of the dear Departed, to your own Sex, to the other Sex (fo attentive as they both are to your Conduct in this

Par-

wi

pro

Ti

fror

Iw

fince

nane

Was have belie

riage

flect your

wor For

most Important Occasions. 209
Particular), and, lastly, which will for ever oblige

Your affectionate and Faithful Friend and Servant.

LETTER CXLVIII.

From a Gentleman, strenuously expostulating with an old rich Widow, about to marry a very young gay Gentleman.

Madam,

11

S

10 th

e-

.

ny

1-te,

his

ac-

to

De-

atthis

Par-

me, to

I AM very forry to hear of the Encouragement you give to the Visits of young Mr. Barnes, because of the great Difference in Years between you. I cannot help giving you the Trouble of this Expositulation, tho' I am told (and much affected I am with the News, if it be true), that the Matter between you is so far gone, that all I can say may too probably prove ineffectual.

Our Sex, Madam, in all your late Husband's Time, has received an Advantage and a Credit from your Conduct in the marry'd State; and now, I wish it may not receive as great a Disparagement, since the prudent Mrs. Bates thinks fit to countenance the Addresses of one who was born after she was marry'd, and a Mother, and who can possibly have no other Inducement than your Fortune. I believe, Madam, you never knew one happy Marriage of this fort in all your Life: And you will resect, that you will not be intitled to Pity, nor the young Man to Censure, if he should prove the worst and most prosligate of Husbands to you. For every one will censure you, and acquit him, should should he even treat you with personal Abuse and Barbarity.

Besides, it is well known, that Mr. Barnes is a young Man of no very promising Inclinations. Some young Gentlemen are as grave and discreet at Twenty-five, as others at Thirty-five: But he has all the Vanity, the Gaiety, the Affectation, of any one at his Time of Life: And can you expect, that he will treat you well, that was never noted for treating his own Mother very dutifully, who, by the way, is younger than yourfelf? Advanced Years are the constant Subject of Ridicule with such wild young Fellows, to their Shame be it spoken! And what can you expect, when the very Motives by which you shall be supposed to be acted in such a Match, will involve you in the deepest Censure, will make you the Contempt of Persons of all Ages, and both Sexes, and expose you to the low Buffoonry even of the Man you have chosen, who, instead of being your Protector, as a Husband ought to be, will probably be the Person who will lead the Fest that all will join in upon you, in order to excuse his own fordid Choice?

You owe it, Madam, give me Leave to say, to the Memory of your late worthy Husband; you owe it to your Sex; you owe it to your self, and your own Interest, and future Good; nay, to Decency, I will venture to add, to proceed no further in this Affair. It seems to me, to be next to a Degree of Incest for a Woman all hoary and grey-goosed over by Time, or who will be soon so, to expose herself to the Embraces of a young Fellow, who is not so old as her first Son would have been, had he lived. Forgive me, Madam; but I cannot help this Plain-dealing on the Occasion. If you proceed in giving Encouragement to the Boy's Address, I expect not, nor can I desire, to be forgiven, or fec pla em giv the to l Per Ob had and Ligi that acts Circ Obje be th vel i Help fo far more you, The have r 1curity fiderat turn P rable] Cause

to

But Pardon thought and ver

to fland upon common Terms with you: If otherwife, I am ready to ask your Pardon; but I cannot with Patience think, that Mrs. Bates, who has paffed thro' every Station hitherto with fo much Applause, as well that of the prudent Widow, and exemplary Matron, as the affectionate Wife, should give fo great a Wound to our Sex as she will do, if the makes fuch a Boy as Mr. Barnes the Succeffor to her late worthy Husband, and the Master of her Person and Fortune: By which Act she will vow Obedience to one who was in a Cradle, when she had Children of her own who were rifing from it; and who would undoubtedly despise her in this Light, were it not for her Wealth; all of which, that he can get at, by Force, or fair Means (if he acts by you as others generally have done in the fame Circumstances), will be squander'd away upon rival Objects more suitable to his Youth, while you will be the Laughing-stock and Scorn of such as will revel in your Spoils, and triumph over you by the Help of your own Fortune. Mean time you will be so far from engaging the Pity of your Sex, that the more confiderate of them will shun and contemn you, as one who has brought a Difgrace upon it: The Men will despise and flout you, and you will have nothing to do but to hide in a contemn'd Obscurity that grey-green Head, which has so inconsiderately involved you in so much Distress, and to turn Penitent for it, and pray for an End to a miferable Life; which, come when it will, will give Cause of Joy and Triumph to your young Husband, and very little Sorrow to any other Person.

But I hope still for better things; and I hope for Pardon for this Freedom; for fain would I be thought by Mrs. Bates,

Her affectionate and faithful Friend, and humble Servant. The following Eleven Epistles may serve as Models for Letters to write by, on the like Occasion; likewise to give a brief Description of London and Westminster, to such as have not seen those Cities; and to point out to those who never were in Town before, what is most worthy of Notice in it.

LETTER CXLIX.

From a young Lady in Town to her Aunt in the Country.

I. Describing the Tower, Monument, St. Paul's, &c.

Honoured Madam,

OU will have me write you down Accounts of what I fee remarkable in and about London, to keep me, as you fay, out of Idleness, and to entertain my good Friends in my Absence. I will obey, tho' your good Opinion of me, I am fenfible, will be no small Disadvantage to me; for I shall convince you more effectually than ever of my Defects, and Want of that Ability to entertain my absent Friends, which their Partiality had made them expect from

To begin then, my Aunt and Coufins carried me, in the first Place, to see the Tower of London, which we have heard fo much Talk of in the Country; and which no one that vifits this great Town, omits seeing. 'Tis situated by the Thames Side, furrounded with an old Wall, about a Mile in Compass, with a broad deep Ditch, which has generally more Mud in it than Water. All round

the

tu

ho

ha

mi

the bac But

Arr

bero

fcor

Ord

Sun.

that

Arm

call i

Mor riofit.

great

most of an built

very o had a

Fre

M

the outward Wall are Guns planted, which on extraordinary Occasions are fired; as, on more common ones, they fire only Rows of others, which are fixed in the Ground, on the Wharf by the Thames. At the Entrance on the Right-hand, we saw the Collection of wild Beasts kept there; as Lions, Panthers, Tygers, &c. also Eagles, Vulturs, &c.

We were then carried to the Mint, where we faw the manner of coining Money, and striking Medals, &c. From thence we went to the Jewelhouse, and were shewn the Crown, and the other Regalia; which gave me no small Pleasure, as I had never seen these Things before, and heard so much Talk of them.

The Horse-Armory is a fine Sight; for here they shew Fisteen of our English Monarchs on Horse-back, all in rich Armour, attended with Guards: But I think this Sight not comparable to the small Armory; for here Pikes, Musquets, Swords, Halberds, and Pistols (enow, as they told us, for three-score thousand Men), are all placed in such beautiful Order, and such various Figures, representing the Sun, Star and Garter, Half-moons, and such-like, that I was greatly delighted with the Sight, all the Arms being bright, and shining.

We saw the Train of Artillery, in what they call the Grand Storehouse; filled with Cannon and Mortars, all very fine, a Diving-bell, and other Curiosities; and I thought, upon the Whole, that this great Magazine of Curiosities and Stores was the most worthy of the Notice of a Stranger to London, of any thing I had been shewn.

e

at es

le

as

nd he From hence they carried me to the Monument, built in Remembrance of the Fire of London, a very curious Pillar, from the Gallery of which we had a Survey of the whole City. But as it stands

low,

low, I cannot say, but I liked the Prospect from St. Paul's Cupola much better, when I was carried up thither, which was Yesterday; for that being the highest Situation in the City, and more in the Centre of London and Westminster, commands a finer View over both Cities, Hampstead and Highgate Hills, Surrey, the River, &c. The Cathedral is a most noble Building, and I admired it not a little, for its Choir, Chapels, Dome, Whispering-place, Vaults below, and other Curiosities too tedious to mention.

This, Madam, may ferve for one Letter, and to fhew you how much I am defirous, by my Obedience to your Commands, to approve myfelf

Your dutiful Niece.

LETTER CL.

From the Same.

II. Describing other remarkable Places in and about London and Westminster, which are generally shewn to Strangers.

Honoured Madam,

I HAVE feen the Custom-house, a Place of Hurry and Business, with a crouded and inconvenient Key, compared to that of Bristol; St. Thomas's and Guy's Hospitals, Southwark, all most noble Charities; St. Bartholomew's, a still nobler; but which, by its additional Buildings, seems to be in a way to swallow up its own Revenues, by pulling down their Tenants Houses, which contributed Means to support the Charity; Smithsfield also, a spacious Market for live Cattle, &c. as, I should have said, I had Leaden-hall Market, a Prodigy of the Sin for I

en

its

nol at (mu not of t Fren the likev tues

exce

ing,

the meet. I exp neated too. with the has Sh is kep Courts Pleas, Exches

and fu

obliged Coufin its Kind, and the Admiration of Foreigners. Sadler's-wells, at Islington, I have been at, and seen there the Diversions of Rope-dancing, Volting, Singing, Musick, &c. which I thought well enough for once. Islington-wells, or the New Tunbridge, I have been at; the Walks and Rooms neat enough, and good Decorum observ'd in both.

The Blue-coat Hospital I have also seen, another noble Charity; and the pretty Sight of the Children at Church, and at Supper on Sunday Night, which much pleased me. The Charter-house too, another noble Charity.

Also the Guildhall of London, a handsome Building, adorn'd with Pictures, and with the Trophies of the Duke of Marlborough's Victory over the French; and the preposterous wooden Figures of the two samous Giants. The Royal Exchange likewise, a very fine Edifice; but they say the Statues of the Kings and Queens there, are ill done, except that of Charles II. in the Middle of the Area, and one or two more.

I have also been carried to Westminster-hall, and the two Houses where the Lords and Commons meet. They are by no means answerable to what I expected, tho' the House of Commons is the neatest, and very convenient for hearing and seeing too. Westminster-hall, like Guildhall, is adorned with the Duke of Marlborough's Trophies, and it has Shops on each Side for Milaners, Booksellers, and such-like Trades. Here the Coronation-Feast is kept; and here are held, as you know, the Courts of Chancery, King's-Bench, Common-Pleas, and up Stairs the Court and Offices of the Exchequer.

The Abbey we are to see another time, being obliged to dine at Westminster with a Friend of my.

Coufin's.

Somerset-house, in the Strand, I have seen, noted for its pleasant Garden fronting the River; and it is, indeed, a fine Palace itself, designed for the Residence of the Queens Dowager of England, when we have fuch a Personage. Marlborough House in the Park, is finely furnished and adorned with Pi-Etures of the Duke's Battles. St. Fames's House is a poor Palace for a King of England; but it feems convenient on the Infide. Buckingham-house stands better than that, for commanding the beautiful Park and Canal. The Treasury, a fine new Building. White-hall, whose Glory is the Banquetting-house, justly admir'd for its Architecture by Inigo Jones, and Inside Painting by Rubens. It is a noble Situation for a Palace, which, were it to be built like this, would be the most magnificent in the World.

We took Coach another time, and were carried thro' the principal Squares and new Buildings about London and Westminster, which are highly worth seeing; such as Lincoln's-Inn Square, Lincoln's-Inn Fields, St. James's Square, Soho Square, Hanover Square, Cavendish Square, and Grosvenor Square, with the Multitude of stately Buildings, and noble Streets contiguous to the latter; a Sight worthy of Admiration.

This, Madam, may ferve for a fecond Letter, and another Instance, tho' a poor one, of that Obedience which will always bind me to be

Your dutiful Niece.

LET-

fo

Sc

its

15

the

Ch

cal

Sto

con

mai

is ac

or's

Offi

Braf

desta T

Win
for Colle
neat, Stran K

men

LETTER CLI.

From the Same.

III. Describing Chelsea Hospital, and Kensington Palace.

Honoured Madam,

le

of

er,

I HAVE been carried, by my obliging Coufins, to Chelsea College, about a Mile from St. James's Park, and to Kensington Palace, about two Miles West from London.

The College, you know, was founded by King Charles II. and finished by the late King William, for the Reception of superannuated Officers and Soldiers. It is fituated on the Banks of the Thames, its Gardens extending quite down to the River. It is a neat and stately Building; the Front, looking to the Thames, has a fine Hall on one Side, and a neat Chapel on the other, with a noble Pavilion, as they call it, between them. The two Sides are four Stories high, and have two Wards in each Story. containing thirty-fix neat Bed-rooms each, for fo Each Corner of this main Building many Soldiers. is adorned with a fine Pavilion, being the Governor's Lodging and Council-chamber; Lodgings for Officers, &c. In the Middle of the Square is a Brass Statue of King Charles II. on a Marble Pedestal.

There are, besides, sour other large and uniform Wings; one is the Infirmary for the Sick, a second for maimed Officers, a third for Officers of the College, the sourch for Servants. The Whole is a neat, convenient, and airy Building, well worth a Stranger's View.

Kensington Palace is a very pretty Summer Retirement for the Court: It is adorn'd with fine Pictures, nich Hangings, and other Ornaments. But the Gardens, which have been much augmented of late Years, are delightful, and we diverted ourselves in walking round them, which gave me great Pleafure; and I could not but wish, that you, Madam, were with me, because you love walking, and would have been much pleased with these charming Gardens, which abound with fine Walks, &c. noble Piece of Water, called the Serpentine River, but for what Reason I know not (it being a strait, and not winding Piece), presents itself to View; and there is lately a new Road made thro' Hydepark to Kensington, by the late Q. Caroline, to keep the Gardens clear from Dust in the Summer, and make them more private from Horses, Passengers, Coaches, &c.; for the old Road, in one Part, ran almost close to the Wall. A Row of Lamps from one End to the other of this Road, is placed on each Side of it, when the Court is there, which is a Beauty, as well as Convenience.

T.

Will this, Madam, serve for a third Letter on the Subject you have prescribed to Your ever-dutiful Niece?

an

Wa

04 nou

of i

adm bett

deed

behe.

three the him-Child

ready

Crou

not

VIOUT

LETTER CLII.

From the same.

IV. Describing Greenwich Park, and the Passage to it by Water.

Honoured Madam,

LAST Tuesday, being Easter Tuesday, I went with my Uncle, Aunt, and Cousins, down the River, on what they call a Party of Pleasure; but with Design principally to see Greenwich Park and Hospital.

We took Water at the Tower, which I describ'd in my first Letter: I was pretty much asraid of Danger from Anchors, Cables, and such-like, as we passed by the great Numbers of Ships, that lay in our Way at first setting out. But afterwards the River looked very pleasant, and the Number of Boats all rowing with the Tide, made the River look very agreeably.

After failing not many Miles, we come within Sight of the Dock-yard at Deptford, where several large Ships upon the Stocks afforded a fine Prospect; as the naval Strength of England is both its Glory, and its Defence.

ut

nd

Next to Deptford, I was greatly pleased with the Prospect of the Royal Hospital at Greenwich, for Seamen grown old in the Service of their Country. When we landed, we went into this fine Building; and in the Inside, every thing, in my Judgment, was perfectly agreeable to the Magnisicence of the Outside; allowing the one to be designed to do Honour to the Nation, the other to support a Number of necessitous People, who ought to be the publick Care. The great Hall, and the Paintings in it, are admirable; but I know not whether they would not better suit a Palace, than an Hospital: And, indeed, this may be said of the whole Building.

From thence we went into the Park; where I beheld divers odd Scenes of Holiday-folks. Here appeared a rakish young Fellow, with two or three Women who look'd like Servant-maids; the Hero delighted, the Nymphs smiling round him----There a careful-looking Father with his Children on each Side; Trains of admiring Lovers, ready-pair'd, sollowed one another in thronging Crouds at the Gate; a Sea-Officer, with a Lady not over-burdened with Modesty in her Behavieur: A Croud of City Apprentices, some with, ogling all they met: And several seemingly disconsolate Virgins walking alone. The Concourse of middling Objects pressed chiefly toward a high Hill in the Middle of the Park; where, as they arriv'd, their Business was to take hold of Hands, and run down as fast as possible, amidst the Huzza's of a Multitude of People, who earnestly expected to see the Women fall, in hopes that their Cloaths would not lie so conveniently, when they were down, as might be wished.

This, Madam, is a Diversion you would not expect so near the polite City of London; but I assure you, such a Levity possessed almost every body assembled on this Occasion, as made the Park, tho' most beautiful in itself, no way entertaining to

Your most dutiful Niece,

hit

G

Wil

Th

Co

Ih

hea

affu

Oc

upo

VIOL

100

the

LETTER CLIII.

From the Same.

V. Describing Bethlehem Hospital.

Honoured Madam,

Y OU tell me, in your last, that my Descriptions and Observations are very superficial, and that both my Uncle and yourself expect from me much better Accounts than I have yet given you. For I must deliver my Opinion, it seems, on what I see, as well as tell you what I have been shewn. Tis well I lest my bettermost Subjects to the last; such, I mean, as will best bear Reslection; and I must try what I can do, to regain that Reputation which your Indulgence, rather than my Merit, had formed for me in your kind. Thoughts Thoughts---Yet, I doubt, I shan't please you, after all. But 'tis my Duty to try for it, and it will be yours, I had almost said, to forgive Imperfections which I should have conceal'd, but for your undeserv'd good Opinions of me, which draw them into Light.

I have this Afternoon been with my Coufins, to gratify the odd Curiofity most People have to see Bethlehem, or Bedlam Hospital.

A more affecting Scene my Eyes never beheld; and furely, Madam, any one inclined to be proud of human Nature, and to value themselves above others, cannot go to a Place that will more effectually convince them of their Folly: For there we see Man destitute of every Mark of Reason and Wisdom, and levell'd to the Brute Creation, if not beneath it; and all the Remains of good Sense or Education serve only to make the unhappy Person appear more deplorable!

I had the Shock of seeing the late polite and ingenious Mr.----in one of these wosul Chambers: We had heard, you know, of his being somewhat disordered; but I did not expect to find him here: No sooner did I put my Face to the Grate, but he leap'd from his Bed, and called me, with frightful Fervency, to come into his Room. The Surprize affected me pretty much; and my Consusion being observed by a Croud of Strangers, I heard it presently whisper'd, That I was his Sweetheart, and the Cause of his Missortune. My Cousin assured me such Fancies were frequent upon these Occasions: But this Accident drew so many Eyes upon me, as obliged me soon to quit the Place.

I was much at a Loss to account for the Behaviour of the Generality of People, who were looking at these melancholy Objects. Instead of the Concern I think unavoidable at such a Sight, a fort of Mirth appeared on their Countenances; and the distemper'd Fancies of the miserable Patients most unaccountably provoked Mirth, and loud Laughter, in the unthinking Auditors; and the many hideous Roarings, and wild Motions of others, seemed equally entertaining to them. Nay, so shamefully inhuman were some, among whom (I am forry to say it!) were several of my own Sex, as to endeavour to provoke the Patients into Rage, to make them Sport.

L 3

I have been told, this dreadful Place is often used for the Resort of lewd Persons to meet and make Assignments: But that I cannot credit; since the Heart must be abandon'd indeed, that could be vicious amidst so many Examples of Misery, and of such Misery, as, being wholly involuntary, may overtake the most secure.

I am no great Admirer of publick Charities, as they are too often managed; but if we confider the Impossibility of poor Peoples bearing this Missortune, or providing suitably for the Distempered at their own Beings, no Praise can, surely, be too great for the Founders and Supporters of an Hospital, which none can visit, without receiving the most melancholy Proof of its being needful. I am, with Respects where due, honoured Madam,

Your most dutiful Niece.

Suin

no

LETTER CLIV.

From the Same.

VI. Diversions of Vaux-hall described.

Honoured Madam,

I WENT on Monday last to Vaux-hall Gardens; whither every-body must go, or appear a sort of Monster in polite Company. For the Convenience of Waterage, as well as of Conversation, we were a pretty large Company, and the Evening proved ferene and clear.

The Passage from Somerset Stairs, where we took Water, was pleasant enough; the Thames at High-water being a most beautiful River, especially above Westminster, where the green Banks, and the open Country, afford a very agreeable Prospect. The Place we landed at was crouded with Boats, and from the Water-side to the Gardens we walk'd thro' a double Line of gaping Watermen, Footmen, old Beggar-women, and Children. As soon as we entered the Walks, I was pleased with a fort of Stage, or Scaffold, raised at the Entrance, for the Servants of the Company to sit out of their Masters way, and yet within Call of the Waiters.

The Mufick-gallery and Organ look perfectly polite; and their being raifed one Story from the Ground, has a good Effect upon the Mulick. The Walks are well enough, but inviron'd with palery wooden Boards, where I expected at least a good One Part of the Whole is thrown Brick-wall. into Walks only; the other is on the Sides filled with Seats or Arbours, with painted Backs; on each of which is represented some Scene of our most common Plays, or the youthful Representation of the Infant Games, &c. I happened to have at my Back honest Hob, come dripping wet out of the Well; and the young Fellows, under colour of shewing their Taste in observing the Beauties of the Piece, were fo perpetually staring in our Faces, that Cousin Bet and I had little Pleasure in our Supper. Perhaps you will wonder at our Supping in so open a Place; but I affure you, Madam, no Lady is too tender for so fashionable a Repast. My Uncle treated us very chearfully; but I could not help grudging the Expence he was for for when the Reckoning was paid, it amounted to no less than Ten Shillings a Head; which I think too dear, as the Entrance money must be sufficient to destray the House and Musick. But as the Whole is devoted to Pleasure, the Expence seems rather to create Satisfaction, than Distaste, as it gives an Opportunity to gallant People to oblige those they love, or pretend to love, in order, most of them, to pay themselves again with large Interests.

The Figure of Mr. Handel, a great Master of Musick, stands on one Side the Gardens, and looks pretty enough: The Musick plays from Five to Ten, about three Tunes (I believe I should have said Pieces) in an Hour. They are all reported to be the best Performers who assist here: But my rough Ears cannot distinguish.

About Ten o'Clock, many People think of Home: But the Votaries of Cupid, I am told, about that Time, visit the remotest Walks, and sigh out the fost Passion in Accents that may possibly be improved by the melting Sweetness of the Musick——I would not have you from hence conclude any Rudeness can be offered; for at the Termination of every Walk, thro' the whole Garden, is placed a Man, to protect the Company from all manner of Insult. But when the Place grows thin of Company, the Lovers have a better Chance to escape being laugh'd at, on the Appearance of any amorous Symptom.

Soon after Ten, we returned to our Boat; and I found the Passage extremely cold, notwithstanding a Covering over us: I must own, I wish'd to be at home, long before I reached it; for I was taken with such a Shivering, as did not leave me for two Days.

Thus,

01

m

Thus, Madam, have I been at Vaux-hall, with the Croud of Fashion-hunters. But if nobody had a greater Inclination than I have to go thither again, that Amusement would soon be given up----For I see more and more, that, do what I will, Nature never designed me to be polite; and I can sincerely declare, that I take more Satisfaction in an Evening-walk with you up the West-grove, where I am so often benefited by your good Instructions, than in the inchanting Shades of the so-much celebrated Vaux-hall. I am, honoured Madam,

Your most dutiful Niece.

LETTER CLV:

From the Same.

VII. An Account of Westminster-Abbey.

Honoured Madam,

I HAVE this Afternoon been at Westminster-Abbey, and not a little pleased with what I have seen there. If there can be Majesty in the Grave, here we fee it: And such was the solemn Effect the facred Repository had upon me, that I never found an awful Reverence equal to what I felt on that Occasion. Whatever be the Intention of erecting these costly Monuments, they seem to me very capable of being made an excellent Sermon to succeeding Generations; for here the most sumptuous Piles serve only to shew, that every one of usmust submit to the same Fate, that has overtaken: those whom Empire itself could not save. And how humble ought the Person to be, who surveys the. Royal Ruins of Mortality, preserved (as if in a vain: L.5.

Defiance of Time) to shew nothing more than the Certainty of our Diffolution!

These, Madam, were my general Sentiments on this Occasion; but as I know you expect more particular Descriptions from me, I will tell you what most struck my Notice among the many remarkable Curiofities to be here met with.

Among the Royal Monuments, those of antient Date pleased me best; because they look agreeable to what I read of the plain Royalty of our former Sovereigns. I lamented the Loss of Henry the Fifth's Head, which being Silver, as they say, was stolen during the Civil War. I much wonder it has never yet been supply'd from some of his Busto's. He wanted not a Head, to speak in the metaphorical Style, while living; and France can testify, that his Heart deserved all Things of English Men: For he was the Terror of the one, and the Glory of the other.

Henry the Seventh's Chapel, in every Part of it, is surprisingly magnificent and beautiful; and, as far as I can judge of such Things, far surpasses all I have seen, either of antient or modern Date.

In this Chapel is the Chair in which our Kings, for many Ages, have been crown'd. 'Tis very plain, and looks as if it were not worth more than

W

or en

So

fu

the Forfeit paid for fitting in it.

The Body of Queen Catharine, Confort to Henry the Fifth, was shewn us in an open Coffin; and what remains of Skin, looks like black discoloured Parchment. She is faid to have been very beautiful; and, surely, to view her now, is a most effectual Antidote against the Vanity rising from that dangerous Accomplishment.

Two Embassadors Cossins are kept here, said to be detained for want of having their Debts discharged. This, indeed, does little Credit to the Crown Crown they ferved; but I can scarce think it the Dishonour design'd them, to be reposited among the Remains of our Kings; tho' indeed several of them have their Debts unpaid too, as I am told.

Several Effigies are preserved in Wax; particularly those of King William, and his excellent Queen Mary; as also, very lately, the truly Royal Queen Anne. To be sure, this is no bad way, for a sew Years, to preserve their Likeness; but I know not whether such gay Representations suit the Solemnity of a Sepulchre. And yet some that stand here, seem not to have deserved that Distinction, if it be deemed one, in Favour of their Memories. A Duchess of Richmond, who walked at King Charles the Second's Coronation, never was remarkable for any thing, as I can hear, but that.

General Monk, in a Habit mourning the Power of Time, stands in a Posture so very fierce, as to seem rather intended to scare Children, than for any other Purpose.

I had almost forgot his Royal Master, King Charles the Second, who stands in his Garter-Robes, and has long been admired by all Comers, it seems, for restoring Monarchy; for I can remember no worthy Actions in his History, nor were we told any more, by the Person who exposed his

Image to our View

A very costly Essign of the late Duke of Buckinghamshire is in this Place, who was somewhat remarkable in his Time, but chiefly for doing what pleased himself, whether any body else was pleased or bettered by it, or not. And, what is odd enough, his surviving Duchess stands by him. Her son too, the last Duke, who died just before he came of Age, is distinguished with an Oftentation superior to all the rest; though all I can learn of
I 6

him is, that he was a hopeful young Nobleman, and the Darling of his Mother.

Many Reasons make it necessary for the Wills, of deceased Persons to be literally observed, the some Instances of, this kind do little Honour to the Deceased; as a Monument erected to the Consort of a noble Lord, for whom a Vacancy being left on his Tomb, as for his second Wise, she, because she could not take the Right-hand of his first Lady, left strict Order to be bury'd where her Bones now lie, and thereby has transmitted her Pride and Folly to succeeding Ages.

Near this Tomb, is the Figure of a Lady bleeding to Death by pricking her Finger: She was Maid of Honour to Queen Elizabeth, and, I think, of the Russel Family. It feems she got her fatal Wound at her Needle; and such has been the Care of the Ladies who have succeeded her, that not one has fallen under the like Missortune ever since.

If I shall not quite tire you, I will proceed with this Subject in my next----And am, mean time, honoured Madam,

Your most dutiful Niece,

LETTER CLVL

From the fame.

VIII. Account of Westminster-Abbey con-

Honoured Madam,

I NOW trouble you with an Account of what most struck my Attention in the outward Ayles of Westwinster-Abbey.

af

60

At entering the North Gate, a Monument of prodigious Size, and great Expence, stood on my Lesthand: It is that of John Holles late Duke of Newcastle, and all that is lest him, out of upwards of 50000 l. a Year, as they tell me he had accumulated, and the two Heirs not much the richer for their Shares of it neither. I hope, as we say in our Country Phrase, it was honestly got.

Next to this, is one confecrated to the Memory of the Duke that preceded him, the last of his Name of the Cavendish Family, as the other was of the Holles; with the celebrated Lady, his Duchess Margaret, a great Writer, and a great Chymist (you know we have her Olio), both lying Side by Side, on a Tomb made great by their Names, and distinguished by their Adventures; but as to outward Grandeur, wholly eclipfed by the former. Behind these is a large Room, or little Chapel, separated from the publick Places, in which are repofited the Holles Family. One of these Gentlemen has at his Feet the Representation of a wild Boar, in Token of his having killed one of those Animals, when he was on a Croisade. Another has a large black Patch over his Right Eye, having loft an Eye on the like Expedition.

Not far from hence, a fine Monument stands, to the Memory of Dr. Chamberlen, a Man-mid-wife, of no great Fame when living, but who happened to have the Esteem of the late Duchess of Buckingham, who erected this to his Memory.

A magnificent Monument stands near this, of a Lady, whose Name is Carteret; and some Reports assign an odd Cause for her Death; viz. the late French King's saying, A Lady one of his Nobles compared to her, was the handsomer of the two.

A fine Monument of Lord Courcey stands near this; on which, we are told, one of his Ancestors had a Privilege granted, of wearing his Hat before the King---Here are feveral Monuments of Gentlemen who fell in the late Wars; Col. Bringfield, in particular, who had his Head shot off by a Cannon-Ball, as he was mounting the Duke of Marlborough, who had a Horse shot under him. Those of others, who were famous for different Talents, as my Favourite Purcell, and Dr. Croft, for Musick, decorate the North Isle; at the Head of which stands Sir Godfrey Kneller, Painter to his late Majesty, with a Copy of Verses on it, that have Mr. Pope's Name affixed to them. In a Corner, that answers to it, on the South-fide of the West Gate, stands a curious Resemblance of James Craggs, Esq; Secretary of State in 1720. erected by a certain Duchess, for what Reason is not said. Mr. Pope has bestow'd great Praises on this Gentleman in a fine Epitaph on his Monument; and 'tis generally allow'd, whatever other Faults he had, he was a companionable Man, and easy of Access----A fmall Distance from this, is a Monument erected by another Duchess, Sister of the former, to the Memory of Mr. Congreve, from the great Esteem the bore him. So here are three Monuments erected to three Favourites, by three Duchesses. What a generous Sex is ours, who carry their Esteem for the Merit of those they favour, beyond the Grave! On the fame Side of the Church is a very flight Monument of the great Earl of Godolphin, who was Lord High Treasurer during the prosperous Part of Queen Anne's Reign; and the mean Appearance this makes, when compared with those of Mr. Craggs, Mr. Congreve, Dr. Chamberlen, &c. makes a Spectator sensible, that a Judgment of the Deceafeds Merits must not be formed from their Monuments; nor, as is to be hoped, the Gratitude and Affection of their Descendents

m

it

w ftu

Na

to 1

Solo

Dr.

vine.

ing f

Chau

Phili

writt Print

bim

Prior

and

the

must fcendents either. Sir Cloudesty Shovel has great Honour done him, his Monument being erected at the Expence of his Royal Mistress. But I thought he was a rough honest Tar; yet his Effigies makes him a great Beau, with a fine flowing full-bottom'd Periwig; such an one, but much finer, and more in Buckle, than that we have seen our Lawyer Mr.

Kettleby wear at our Affizes.

Mr. Thynne's Murder is prettily represented on his Tomb----But before I step into what is call'd the Poets Row, I must return to the Door of the Choir; on the North-side of which is placed a noble Monument of the great Sir Isaac Newton, which I humbly apprehend to be needless; for has he not built for himself a much finer Monument, and a much more durable one, than Marble? And will it not out-last this we see here, and the Abbey which contains it? He lies in a contemplative Poflure, leaning on the Volumes that have made his Name immortal. Opposite to him, at the South Entrance of the same Door, is a very grand Pile. to the Memory of the late Earl Stanhope, a brave Soldier, tho' unfortunate in one Battle; and a Man of great Probity.

On one Side of the Poets are Dr. South and Dr. Busby; the one an humourous and witty Divine, the other as remarkable a Schoolmaster, being famous for his Discipline and Severity. Geoffry Chaucer has reach'd us: Spencer is near him; Philips not far from Spencer. Ben Johnson is written on a poor Bust: And Butler (put up by a Printer, to make his own Name samous) bears him Company. I would sain not name Matt. Prior; but his Monument is so beautiful and large, and his Busto so admirable, being a Present to the Poet by the French King Lewis XIV. that I must not pass it over; tho, poor Man! it serves

t

e

e-

only to proclaim his Vanity, being erected at his own Defire and Expence: A fad Instance of Pride beyond the Grave! Behind him stands Mr. Gay, in a Place confecrated to Mortality, declaring Life is a Fest, &c. Dryden has only his Name on his Bust. Milton has lately been put up by a Gentleman, who, after the Printer's Example abovementioned, has a mind to engraft his own Fame on the other's Stock; but, in this, out-does Mr. Barber: For, after dedicating Six fingle Letters to the Poet's Name, M, I, L, T, O, N, he bestows many Words upon his own; not being content to name the little Honours he, the Erector, now enjoys, but the leffer ones which he possessed in the former Reign; and from this Example, the Architect (who, no doubt, was paid for his Labour) has Seven Words to his Fame, declaring, That Rysbrack was the Statuary who cut it. Here's fine ingrafting Work for you! However, Milton's Memory is a Tree that will do Honour to the weakest Scyon that shall sprout from it, or even to a Dung-hill, were such a thing to lie at its Root. But of all the Monuments in the Abbey, the modern ones especially, none comes up to that of Shake speare lately erected; where the Poet is represented in Marble almost as much to the Life, as he is in his Works. I am, Madam.

Your most obedient Niece.

no

the juc

tro

me ligh

Spea

It W

lo pi rob'

depen

right

lefs n Ican

after :

noran Mada

LETTER CLVII.

From the same.

IX. On a Concert or Musical Entertainment.

Honoured Madam,

I WENT last Night to see, or rather to hear, a new Entertainment of Mufick : And must confess, I was much disappointed of the Pleasure I promifed promised myself. I can't say but I liked two or three of the Songs well enough; and the Musick, that was playing all the while, I did not disapprove. But pray, Madam, can you tell me (for I have already ask'd twenty, not one of whom will answer me), What is the Reason of having every Word spoken, squeaked to---- I cannot say a Tune, but to fuch a Hum as makes me quite fick? If it be the Musick that is valuable, why must the Words torture it? And if the Words be fought after, wherefore should they be broken to Pieces by Notes that drown the Sound, and quite lose their Sense? What I mean is, I believe, call'd, Speaking in Recitative: But whence was this Mode of Speech taken? In what Country is it natural? And if it be natural no-where, of what is it an Imitation? What are the Marks of its Excellencies? and how shall we judge of its Merit? Whence can arise any Pleasure from hearing it? And shall we find Cause for exculing the Time loft in such an unnatural Amusement? For myself, I must own 'twas far from delighting me; for as it was neither Singing nor Speaking, I could not tell what to make of it; for it was more like to make me cry than laugh, I was so provok'd, when the Twang of the Harpsichord rob'd me of the Word the whole preceding Line depended upon !--- I must confess myself for downright Speaking or Singing: I hate Mongrels; unless my Judgment be convinced by fuch Reasons as can't, for my Life, hit upon at present. Yet, after all, I begin to think, I am betraying my Ignorance all this time; and so I'll conclude myself, Madam,

t

7,

1;

28

n,

68.

t.

r, a onre I Your most dutiful Nieces

LETTER CLVIII.

From the same. X. On the Diversions of the Playbouse.

Honoured Madam,

OW I have, by your Indulgence, tarry'd in Town till the Approach of Winter, you will expect, that I should give you a little Account of the Diversions of the Stage. To begin then: My Coufin William and his two Sifters conducted me last Night to the Playhouse, and we took Places in the Pit.

You may believe I was agreeably furprifed at the Magnificence of the Stage, and its elegant Ornaments; and I was mightily pleafed to fee fuch a prodigious Number of People seated with Ease, and conveniently placed to hear the natural Pitch of a common Voice. I did not expect to find the Mufick fo near the Audience; but believe that the most proper Situation to convey the Sound over the whole Theatre.

The Play I faw was a Comedy, in which the Parts acted by Women had several Speeches that I thought not quite consistent with the Modesty of the Sex. And the Freedom of their Voice and Gestures, tho', perhaps, suitable enough to the Characters they represented, were not so pleasing to a Mind bent upon innocent Amusement (if not wholly upon Instruction), as Speeches that put us not to the Expence of a Blush. What Hardship must it be to the Minds of these Women, to enter first upon this Employment! How must their Virtue (and fure no Woman is without Virtue at her Entrance into the World) be shock'd to offer themselves for the Entertainment of Six hundred Men,

ſh

ge Su

lifie

less

WOI

rath

that led a into thou guess highe

cency

to th

Awe

Tafte

is deci

able fo

the Co

a fort

ing C

therefo

T

Thefe

and to utter Words which convey Ideas too gross for a modest Ear, and such as would be difficult to hear in private Company without Confusion! How hard, then, must the Utterance of them be to a numerous and gay Assembly! And yet, I am asfured, several Women who get their Bread upon the Stage, are strictly virtuous. If such there are, how great must be their Merit, when compared with that of the wicked ones of our Sex, who are liable to none of their certain and numerous Temptations! But yet, where it can be avoided, why should Women expose themselves to certain Dangers, if there is a Possibility of obtaining a tolerable Subfistence without it? And those who can live by Performance upon the Stage, certainly possess Qualifications more than fufficient to fublift in fafer and less dependent Stations.

The Behaviour of the Men I did not so much wonder at; for a becoming Assurance in them is rather pleasing than disobliging: Nor did I perceive, that so many Expressions, which are oftener miscalled arch, than more truly named obscene, were put into the Mouths of the Men as of the Women; though the Reason the Poets have for this I cannot guess.

e

10

I

of

nd

a-

2 ot

us

up

ter

ue

n-

men,

and

The Conduct of the Company I thought, to the highest Degree, commendable: The utmost Decency was observed, and I saw nothing disagreeable to the strictest Politeness, or good Manners; the Awe given by so great an Audience of Persons of Taste, being too much to admit any thing but what is decent and obliging: Not that I think it adviseable for Women to go alone to the Playhouse; for the Complaisance, so sashionable at present, affords a sort of Occasion for laying them under such seeming Obligations as cannot be returned, and ought therefore not to be accepted.

These, dear Madam, are the rough Thoughts, on this Occasion, of Your dutiful Niece.

LETTER CLIX.

From the same.

XI. The Play, and the low Scenes of Harlequinery after it, described and exposed.

Honoured Madam,

Having, as I told you in my last, seen a Comedy, I was next carry'd by my Cousin William, and his kind Sisters, to a Tragedy; which was that of Hamlet: And I was greatly moved with the Play, and pleased with the Action. But the low Scenes of Harlequinery that were exhibited asterwards, fill'd me with high Disgust, insomuch that I could, for their sake, have wish'd I had not seen the other. I will give you an Account of this dismal Piece of farcical dumb Shew.

We were, then, presented with the most extraordinary Gentleman I ever beheld, who, with the ugliest Face, and most apish Behaviour I ever saw, had the most amazing Success in his Amours, with Ladies whose Appearance deserved a more amiable Gallant.

My Cousin William told me the Name of this Hero was MR. HARLEQUIN; but as you know Billy has no great Capacity, you will be the less furprised to hear he answer'd not one Question I ask'd him to my Satisfaction.

Whom does that Character represent, Cousin?

Harlequin.
Pray, of what Nation is the Gentleman?
France.

What

a Soi

T

H

B

H

Th

What is his Business on the Stage?

To be admired by every Woman who sets Eyes on him.

Why feem they fo fond of him?

Because he is Harlequin. Why is his Face black?

Harlequin's was never of any other Colour.

Who is the Lady with whom he appears to be in the strictest Engagement?

Colombine.

Who is fhe?

Colombine.

Whence came she, pray, Cousin?

From France.

Is the married, or fingle?

Mostly married; and at Harlequin's Service, in spight of her Husband's Teeth.

Why fo?

,

1-ne:

V,

th

le

his

WC

leis

nI

1?

hat

Because Colombine is to be at his Beck on every Occasion.

For what Reason?

Because they never appear without one another.

Is this Nature?

It is Fashion, and that's as good.

Why don't these worthy Persons favour us with a Song?

They never Speak.

How must I understand them?

By the Motion of their Heads, Hands, and Heels.

Have they no Tongues?

They must not use them.

Why does he wear a wooden Sword?

'Tis his Symbol, to which whatever obstructs his Wishes, must give way.

Why?

That he may come at Colombine against all Obfruction.

Why

Why must they needs be together?

That the People may laugh.

Wherefore should we laugh?

Because they are together.

Why does Mr. HARLEQUIN delight so much in jumping?

To please his Mistress.

Why does she admire him for that?

Because he can reach her over other Mens Shoulders.

Is that Wit?

We laugh at it.

So you may; but it is more like to fet me a crying.

You're a Country Lass, Cousin.

You, Cousin, are a Town Gentleman.

By this, Madam, you may guess at my Entertainment. We had just seen Hamlet, as I have said: My Heart was sull of Ophelia's Distress, and the Prince's Fate had shaken my Soul: In this State of Mind, to sit two Hours to see People run after one another as if they were bewitched, only to cuckold a poor simple-looking Husband, put me so much out of Patience, that I shall not bear the Sight of the Stage for some time. And indeed, having now run thro' the Diversions of the Town, I begin to be desirous of casting myself at your Feet, as becomes

Your dutiful Niece.

E

ord

the fe&

Per

to :

Wit

efca

giou

Freq

is on comp

gate

Num

cern :

Three

Horro in Marterrible own terrible Exhor of St. but the lo grea

7

LETTER CLX.

From a Country Gentleman in Town, to his Brother in the Country, describing a publick Execution in London.

Dear Brother,

I HAVE this Day been satisfying a Curiosity I believe natural to most People, by seeing an Execution at Tyburn: The Sight has had an extraordinary Essect upon me, which is more owing to the unexpected Oddness of the Scene, than the assecting Concern which is unavoidable in a thinking Person, at a Spectacle so awful, and so interesting, to all who consider themselves of the same Species with the unhappy Sufferer.

0

1, ur

ce.

T.

That I might the better view the Prisoners, and escape the Pressure of the Mob, which is prodigious, nay, almost incredible, if we consider the Frequency of these Executions in London, which is once a Month; I mounted my Horse, and accompanied the melancholy Cavalcade from Newgate to the fatal Tree. The Criminals were Five in Number. I was much disappointed at the Unconcern and Carelessness that appeared in the Faces of Three of the unhappy Wretches: The Countenances of the other Two were spread with that Horror and Despair which is not to be wonder'd at in Men whose Period of Life is so near, with the terrible Aggravation of its being haften'd by their own voluntary Indifcretion and Misdeeds. Exhortation spoken by the Bell-man, from the Wall of St. Sepulchre's Church-yard, is well intended; but the Noise of the Officers, and the Mob, was to great, and the filly Curiofity of People climbing into the Cart to take Leave of the Criminals, made fuch a confused Noise, that I could not hear the Words of the Exhortation when spoken; tho' they are as follow:

All good People, pray heartily to God for these poor Sinners, who now are going to their Deaths; for whom this great Bell doth toll.

"You that are condemn'd to die, repent with lamentable Tears. Ask Mercy of the Lord for the Salvation of your own Souls, thro' the Merits, Death, and Passion, of Jesus Christ, who

" now fits at the Right-hand of God, to make Intercession for as many of you as penitently rece turn unto him.

"Lord have Mercy upon you! Christ have Mercy upon you!"----Which last Words the Bell-man repeats three times.

All the way up Holborn the Croud was so great, as, at every twenty or thirty Yards, to obstruct the Passage; and Wine, notwithstanding a late good Order against that Practice, was brought the Malefactors, who drank greedily of it, which I thought did not suit well with their deplorable Circumstances: After this, the Three thoughtless young Men, who at first seemed not enough concerned, grew most shamefully daring and wanton; behaveing themselves in a manner that would have been rediculous in Men in any Circumstance whatever: They swore, laugh'd, and talk'd obscenely, and wish'd their wicked Companions good Luck, with as much Assurance as if their Employment had been the most lawful.

At the Place of Execution, the Scene grew still more shocking; and the Clergyman who attended

Was

he

N

Pfa

m

the

ho

In

ma

was more the Subject of Ridicule, than of their fe-The Pfalm was fung amidst the rious Attention. Curses and Quarreling of Hundreds of the most abandon'd and profligate of Mankind: Upon whom (so stupid are they to any Sense of Decency) all the Preparation of the unhappy Wretches feems to ferve. only for the Subject of a barbarous kind of Mirth, altogether inconsistent with Humanity. And as soon as the poor Creatures were half dead, I was much furprised, before such a Number of Peace-Officers, to fee the Populace fall to haling and pulling the Carcases with so much Earnestness, as to occasion. feveral warm Rencounters, and broken Heads. Thefe, I was told, were the Friends of the Perfons executed, or fuch as, for the fake of Tumult, chose to appear so, and some Persons sent by private Surgeons to obtain Bodies for Diffection. The Contests between these were sierce and bloody, and frightful to look at: So that I made the best of my Way out of the Croud, and, with some Difficulty, rode back among a large Number of People, who had been upon the same Errand with myself. Face of every one spoke a kind of Mirth, as if the Spectacle they had beheld had afforded Pleasure inflead of Pain, which I am wholly unable to account

10 bc

eht

ming ed,

ve-

ri-

er:

and vith

eell

ftill

nded

Was

In other Nations, common Criminal Executions are said to be little attended by any beside the necessary Officers, and the mournful Friends; but here, all was Hurry and Consussion, Racket and Noise, Praying and Oaths, Swearing and Singing Psalms: I am unwilling to impute this Difference in our own from the Practice of other Nations, to the Cruelty of our Natures; to which, Foreigners, however, to our Dishonour, ascribe it. In most Instances, let them say what they will, we are humane beyond what other Nations can boast; but in this, the Behaviour of my Countrymen is past my accounting for; every Street and Lane I passed through, bearing rather the Face of a Holiday, than of that Sorrow which I expected to see, for the untimely Deaths of five Members of the Community.

M

One of their Bodies was carried to the Lodging of his Wife, who not being in the way to receive it, they immediately hawked it about to every Surgeon they could think of; and when none would buy it, they rubb'd Tar all over it, and left it in a Field hardly cover'd with Earth.

This is the best Description I can give you of a Scene that was no way entertaining to me, and which I shall not again take so much Pains to see. I am, dear Brother, Yours affectionately.

ce

fo.

tha yet

I fe

larl

me

I th

Advice of an Aunt to a Niece, in relation to her Conduct in the Addresses made her by Two Gentlemen; one a gay, fluttering Military Coxcomb, the other a Man of Sense and Honour. In Five Letters.

LETTER CLXI.

I. The Aunt to the Niece, desiring her own Opinion of her Two Lovers.

Dear Lydia,

I AM given to understand, that you have two new Admirers, of very different Tempers and Professions; the one Capt. Tomkins of the Guards; the other Mr. Rushford. As I know Mr. Rushford ford to be a fensible, fedate, worthy Gentleman : I am a little uneafy, left he should be discouraged for the other. And yet, as I know not the Merits or Qualifications of the Captain, I would not cenfure you, or condemn him, right or wrong. This makes me defire your Sentiments of both, and that you'll acquaint me to which you most incline. I have a very high Opinion of your Prudence, and can have no View in this Request, but your Good. Only, I must affure you, that I have such an Esteem for Mr. Rushford's Character, that the other Gentleman ought to be fomething more extraordinary than is to be generally met with in his Profession; to be prefer'd to him. I hope you'll think fo too; but be this as it will, the frank Declaration of your Mind will be very obliging to Your truly affectionate Aunt.

LETTER CLXII.

II. The Niece's Answer: Describing the Behaviour of the sensible Lover.

Honoured Aunt,

I HAVE, on fo many Occasions, as well of this, as other Kinds, been obliged to your kind Concern for me, that I should be very ingrateful, if I conceal'd from you the least Byas of my Mind on so important an Occasion. I think truly, with you, that Mr. Rushford is a very valuable Gentleman; yet he is over-nice, fometimes, as to the Company I fee; and would take upon him a little too much, if I did not keep him at a Distance; and, particularly, is so uneasy about the Captain, that he wants me to forbear feeing him on any Occasion. Now, I think, this is a little too prescribing, for the Time M 2 of

of our Acquaintance, and the small Progress I have hitherto permitted to the Intimacy between us. For what is this but furrendering to him upon his own Terms? and that, too, before I am fummon'd in Form? Nothing but a betrothed Lover, or a Husband, has, furely, a Right to expect this Obfervance; and if I were to oblige him, it is abfolutely putting myself in his Power, before he convinces me how he will use it. O my dear Aunt, these Men, I see, even the worthiest of them, are incroaching Creatures !--- And a Woman that would not be despis'd, must not make her Will too cheap an Offering to that of her Admirer. Then, my dear Aunt, I know not how it was with you formerly; but there is a Pleasure in being admired, that affects one very fenfibly; and I know not whether even Mr. Rushford would fay half the fine Things he does, if he had not a Competitor that fays nothing elfe. And I think it a kind of Robbery that a Woman commits upon her Pleasures, if the too foon confines herself to one. For the can be but once courted; unless such an Event happens, that she must have a very bad Heart, that can wish for it. And why should a Woman absolutely bind herself to the Terms of For Better or For Worse, before the goes to Church?--- I hope, when the Ceremony has passed, I shall make a very good Wife: But why should I buckle to Honour and Obey, when it is all the Time I shall have to be honoured and obeyed myfelf? --- Indeed, Aunt, I think, there is a great deal in this. And Mr. Rushford gives himself wonderful grave Airs already: As I'll give you an Instance .---- But here the Captain is come, and I will give you an Account of it in my next. For I will lay before you faithfully all my Proceedings with both Gentlemen, and their Behaviour; and you will be enabled abled to judge from my Account, which I prefer, were I not to declare myself as plainly as I am sure I ought to do, in every Particular demanded of me by so good an Aunt. I am, Madam,

Your truly dutiful and affectionate Kinswoman.

LETTER CLXIII.

From the Same.

III. Containing the Description of the Behaviour of the same Gentleman; which occasions a Love-quarrel.

Honoured Aunt,

I HOPE, the Suspense I gave you by my abrupt breaking off in my last, will be forgiven. I was going to give you an Instance of Mr. Rushford's grave Airs. He comes last Thursday with great Formality, and calls himself my humble Servant; and I saw he was pleased to be displeased at fomething, and fo look'd as grave as he, only bowing my Head, and following my Work; for I was hemming a Handkerchief. You are very busy, Madam .--- Yes, Sir .--- Perhaps I break in upon you .--- Not much, Sir .--- I am forry if I do at all, Madam.---You fee I am pursuing my Work, as I was before you came. --- I do, Madam! --- very gravely, faid he .--- But I have known it otherwise, when Somebody else has been here .--- Very likely, Sir !---But then I did as I pleased--- so I do now--and who shall controul me?---- I beg Pardon, Madam; but 'tis my Value for you---- That makes you troublesome, faid I, interrupting him.----I am forry for it, Madam ! --- Your humble Servant .--- Yours, Sir .--- So away he went .--- Well, thought I, if thou art to be lost for this, and must M 3

put me into bodily Fear, every time thou haft a

Mind to be grave, Adieu to thee!

In the Evening he comes again---- Mrs. Betty. Is your Lady disengaged? Could I be admitted to fay one Word to her? I believe fo, Sir. Madam. Mr. Rushford begs to be admitted to say one Word to you. He was at the Door, and heard me, as I know. Do you introduce him, faid I (with as much Form as he), to my Presence. He enter'd. I rose up, with my Hands before me---- I see you are angry with me, Madam .--- I am forry for it, Sir, faid I. Sorry for your Anger, I hope, Madam. --- I should be forry, Sir, said I, if any body should fee me angry for nothing .--- I am forry, Madam, that you fet as nothing one that has so much Value for you. Mr. Rushford, faid I, we have so many Sorry's between us, that I should be pleas'd with a few Glad's !--- Why, faid he, with this stiff, fet Air, do you delight to vex thus an Heart that you can make forry or glad at your Pleasure? ---- Why am I, Sir, to be treated capriciously, and to have my Conduct upbraided, when you think proper to be out of Humour? ---- I out of Humour, Madam! ----- I thought fo---- Was it in high good Humour that you infulted me, with that Somebody elfe? --- I own, Madam, I cannot bear to fee you fo gay, so pleased, and lively, when that painted Butterfly is here; and So grave, so laconick, so reserv'd, when I pay my Respects to you. Pr'ythee, pr'ythee, Mr. Rushford, none of these prescribing Airs!----What Right have I given you to use me thus?---- Madam, I boped my Address was not quite unwelcome .--- Whatever your Address is, your Prescriptions are.--- I cannot, where I so much love, bear such a Difference as I always fee in your Temper, when that Flutterer is here, to what I experience .- The Difference perhaps may be in the Men, not in the Woman. As how, Madam?

P

Madam? As how! Why, faid I, he makes me laugh, and if I was to give way to't, your grave Airs would make me cry!---Thank you, Madam, faid he! What's Sport to you, is Death to me!----And so he figh'd, and took a Turn or two about the Room .--- I was flanding all this time.

He came, and took my Hand, and look'd fo filly upon me, I half pity'd him: I hope, Madam, I don't keep you standing!---Yes, you do, Sir!---I beg, Madam, you'll not torture me with this contemptuous Formality!----I think I am the most complainant Creature breathing!---To ME, Madam, do you mean!---Yes, Sir.---You always mean something in your Paradoxes, Madam: May I ask your Meaning now?---When I last fat and pursued my Work, you were displeased. I now stand, and have nothing to do but to be entertain'd in such an agreeable manner as you shall think properest for me----yet you are not pleased.

Madam, said he, you put me quite beside my Purposes!---If I thought you would have it so, I would sooner die than be so troublesome to you, as I now have Reason to think myself.---If you have Reason to think so, I hope you are Master of your own Actions, said I.---Do you forbid me your Presence for ever, Madam?----I do, if you ask it, Sir. (Was not this, Madam, daring me to answer even worse?)----I ask it, Madam! Heaven is my Witness, it would be the heaviest thing that could befal me.----You would not thus brave it from me, if you thought fo, faid I, quite nettled.

In this manner we went on, till we had vex'd one another to some Purpose; and then he was so good as to give me Leave to sit down, and I was so gracious as to permit him to sit by me; and we parted with no Displeasure on either Side. Thus much for Mr. Rushford, and his grave Airs. My next shall let you into the Qualifications of his Competitor. Till when, I am, honour'd Madam,

M 4

Your dutiful Kinswoman.

LETTER CLXIV.

IV. From the same: Describing ber fluttering Pretender.

Honoured Madam,

I NOW give you some Account of the Captain. He is a handsome Person of a Man, of a good Family: Heir to a good Estate: Dresses well, sings well, dances well--- So much for his good Qualities. As for his others; he is infufferably vain; talkative; is always laughing, especially at what he fays himfelf; and, fometimes, at the Conceit of what he is going to say, before he speaks: He has such an undaunted Assurance, that there is no such thing as putting him out of Countenance. One Instance I'll give you----He is always admiring himfelf in the Glass; infomuch that while he is in the Room, I cannot peep into one without staring him in the Face; and one Day rallying him on this, I asked him how the Glasses were fixed in a Camp? He reply'd, without Hesitation, O Madam! the Care our Generals take to pitch our Tents by the Banks of some transparent Stream, serves very well for that Purpose. And then he laugh'd most egregiously for five or fix Minutes together.

You may believe, Madam, from what I have faid, that I give no great Encouragement to his Visits. Yet is there no such thing as getting rid of him; for by all his Conduct, I plainly see, he has swallow'd the ridiculous Opinion, that the more

averfe

averse a Woman appears to a Man's Address, the more Ground he has to expect Success; and he seems so assured of winning me, that I begin to be apprehensive, every time he puts his Hand in his Pocket, that he will pull out a Licence and a Ring.---If I admit him into my Company, I know not how to get rid of him. If I cause myself to be deny'd, he plants himself directly against my Window, that the whole Neighbourhood may know his Business: Thus, with or without my Consent, he will be either thought my reigning Admirer, or he will, Don Quixote like, have me for his Dulcinea, in spite of my Teeth.

He has three or four times shew'd away before Mr. Rushford, and, as I cannot forbear heartily laughing at the Airs he gives himself, tho' for very different Reasons from those by which bis risible Muscles are moved, he thinks me pleased with him; and, what is more vexatious, Mr. Rushford thinks so too, and grows serious and sullen, as I instanc'd in my former.

Now, Madam, what can I do? I heartily despise my Soldier; I greatly regard Mr. Rushford's good Sense, good Breeding, and other good Qualities: But to forbid this Fop, is what I am fure will have no Weight with him; for I have as good as done it feveral times, and he tells me, he will visit me whether I will or not, as long as I am unmarried: And to do it professedly in Complaisance to Mr. Rushford, unless Matters had gone further between us, is putting myself absolutely in his Power, and declaring myself his, before he asks me the Question. So, may I not laugh on a little at the one, and teize the other's causeless Jealoufy, do you think, till I bring Mr. Rushford to speak out so explicitly, that a Woman of some Niceness, as I pretend to be, may be in no Danger M 5 of mistaking him? Besides, I think Mr. Rushford a little too capricious, and should be glad to break him of it, lest, if it ever should be our Lot to come together, that Temper should improve upon him; and be more troublesome from an Husband, than it is from an humble Servant. I should be glad my Conduct might merit the Approbation of so good a Judge: But if it do not, I will endeavour to conform myself to your Advice: For I am, and ever will be, honoured Madam,

Your most dutiful Niece.

LETTER CLXV.

V. From the Aunt, containing solid Advice and Caution on this Occasion.

Dear Lydia,

YOUR last Letter pleased me much better than your two former: For your first held me in great Suspense; your second gave me Concern for your rigorous Treatment of poor Mr. Rushford, who, 'tis plain, loves you much; but your third confirms me in the Opinion I always entertain'd of your Prudence, in preferring a Man of Sense to a Coxcomb.

I must tell you, that nothing could give me greater Pleasure, than to see you Mr. Rushford's Bride. His Fortune is good, his Person manly and agreeable, and his Behaviour polite. But in my Opinion, you have need of all your Prudence and Caution, to avoid giving him a lasting Disgust; for I would have you always remember, my Dear, that nothing can give such Dislike to a Man of Wisdom and Discernment, as to make him imagine a Fool is prefer'd to him.

If Mr. Rushford did not love you, he would not be jealous of such a Fop as you describe; and it is enough to keep his Passions awake, when he sees you so grave, and so severe, as I may say, to him, and so facetious and chearful with the other. For many a Woman of Sense, in other respects, has been caught by some of those ridiculous Airs that such empty Laughers give themselves; and if you should carry your Jest too sar, it might make him despise a Levity, as he would be apt to construe it, which he would think unworthy of his Addresses.

I know it is but too natural to our Sex to love to be admired; but this Humour, when not properly bounded and guarded, has many times cost us dear, even the Happiness of all our Lives. Don't be afraid of obliging Mr. Rushford, in a Point so material to his Tranquillity, and your own Reputation, as the forbidding the Visits of your Man of Scarlet: For, as you intend not to encourage him, and he has fo undaunted an Affurance, founded on fo much Folly, I think, if you had no other humble Servant, it would not be reputable to receive this; much less when you have one of so different a Cast, that Light and Darkness are not more opposite: And a Person must have a very indifferent Regard to a Man of Merit, who would not give up fuch an one to his Request; for the very Thought, of a Competition with fuch a Rival, in fo tender and nice a Point, must be disgusting to a Man of Senfe.

And besides, you know not, my Dear, but Mr. Rushford may be deter'd from a formal putting the Question to you, by the Apprehension, that you see his Rival with too much Approbation: For can a Man of his Sense think of giving himself up absolutely to a Person who seems to waver in her Judgment, which to prefer of two such M 6

Competitors? Must not the Mind that can hesitate one Moment on such a Decision, appear unworthy of the Character of his Wife?

And then, as to teizing him for his Jealoufy, and breaking him of it aforehand, I doubt this favours a little too much of the ungenerous Tempers of some of our Sex, who love to tyrannize, when they can. Prudence in a Lady is the best Cure of Jealousy in a Gentleman: And is the Method you propose of laughing on with the Captain, and teizing a worthy Man, who undoubtedly loves you, a Mark of that Prudence ?--- Indeed, I fear, if you go on thus, you will either lose Mr. Rushford, or will be oblig'd to keep him at the Expence of a Submission (after you have provok'd him) proportionable to the Infult he will receive; and this, my dear Kinfwoman, will be but little agreeable to the Pride of our Sex, and a particular Mortification to your ozun.

One Rule let me give you: That the more obliging you are in the Time of your Power, the more it will move a generous Mind to indulge you, in bis; and the Time you may reckon yours, may not be Three Months in Proportion to Thirty Years of his; or the whole Life. And pray, my Dear, remember, that young Ladies assume a Task they are very little qualify'd for, when they set up to break Tempers, and manage Husbands, before they are married.

Your Prudence will suggest to you a very proper Conduct, I am sure, to secure a worthy Husband, without my writing a Word more: Especially as I know it will teach you to overcome the little low Pleasure, which some of our Sex take, at your Years, in being admir'd and slatter'd, and to conquer the little teizing Pride of perplexing and torturing the Heart of a worthy Admirer, mirer, when we think we have it in our Power. And so hoping soon to hear, that you have banish'd the Captain, and are in the way to change the Name of Fenton for that of Rushford, I remain, my dear Niece,

Your affectionate Aunt.

LETTER CLXVI.

From a Lady to her false Lover, who, after having brav'd all his Friends Expostulations, at last is persuaded to abandon her for another of larger Fortune.

SIR,

TIS a poor, a very poor Pretence, that you make, after what has passed between us, that you must, in Compliance with the Commands of your Friends, break off Acquaintance with me! How often have I advised you to this formerly! How often have you vow'd the Impossibility of your doing it! How have you, in pursuance of this Avowal, brav'd your Friends, and defy'd their Refentments, in fuch a manner, that gave them no Hope of fucceeding with you! tho' I always blam'd your disobliging way of doing it, in regard to them, as your Relations. But just as you had brought them to expect you would not be prevail'd upon, and they had fo far acquiefced in your Choice, that I had received and returned Visits from the Principals of your Family, for you poorly to plead their Menaces, is fuch a Jest, as is not to be received without Contempt and Indignation.

Well, I can guess at your Motives !---tho' you are too mean-spirited to acknowlege them, and that they are too mean to be acknowleged. Miss Holles can explain them all, by the Help of a larger Fortune than I have! I have heard of your Uncle's Proposal, and your Visit there .--- Go on, Sir, and welcome! I have Spirit enough to despise the Man that could deceive me .--- But could you not, for your own fake, act this perfidious Part in a more manly, and more worthy manner? Could you not find a better Reason than one you had always rejected, when it was more your Duty to observe it? But must you, when your Vows to me had made it your Duty to dispense with it, then shew your Levity in adhering to it? Yet why do I exposulate with a Person so little deserving Expostulation? You may think me angry, because of my Disappointment. 'Tis true, it is a Disappointment, and I had a better Opinion of you than this Conduct shews you deserved; or Things should never have proceeded fo far as they did. But 'tis a Disappointment, I hope (tho' no Thanks to any Part of your Conduct, but your Meanness), I shall soon get over. And tho' I wish you no Harm, let us see, if, Seven Years hence, you will be fo many hundred Pounds the richer, as makes the Difference to you, between Miss Holles and Her you have treated so unworthily. And if that will make you happier, I truly wish you may be so! For I am not your Enemy, tho' you deserve not that I should style myfelf

Your Friend.

LETTER CLXVII.

From a Gentleman to his Lady, whose Overniceness in her House, and uneasy Temper with her Servants, make their Lives uncomfortable.

My Dear,

Y OUR kind Concern for my Absence is very obliging. 'Tis true, I have already out-stay'd my Intention by a Week; and I find the Place I am in so very engaging, and Mr. Terry and his Sister so agreeable, that, but to come to you, I could willingly stay a Month longer with them. In short, my Dear, Mr. Terry lives just as I would wish to live; and his Sister, who is his House-keeper, is just what I would wish you to be, in many Particulars; tho' no one, in my Opinion, can equal you in others.

You must know, then, that Mr. Terry and I are quite happy in one another; and when he has no Visitors, are indulged in a very pretty Parlour, which neither Pail nor Mop is permitted to enter for two or three Days together. And when we have Company, the Dining-room is at our Service, and the kind Lady lets us smoke there without remarking upon the beastly Fumes that we give the Furniture. Not only so, but is, by a sudden Turn of the Pipe, any one of us chances to bestrew the Floor with burnt Tobacco, we are not broken in upon either by Maid or Broom. And yet no Room can be cleaner than we find that, when we return to it from a Walk in the Gardens.

And indeed, I must acquaint you, that I never saw a Lady more prudently nice than Mrs. Terry.

Her

Her Person, Furniture, and House, are even Patterns of Neatness and good Œconomy. I never any-where saw the one or the other out-done. Yet how can this be, I marvel!---For I have seen her pass over the Mark of a dirty Shoe-heel, upon a Floor as white as a Curd, and never once rank the Aggressor among the worst of Slovens. Nay, more than that, I have seen her Brother drop a sew Crums of Bread and Butter under his Feet, without so much as one corrective Frown: Is not this strange, my Dear? Have Batchelors, from a Sister, more Privileges, than a marry'd Man from his Wise?

More than this (it is true, upon my Honour! incredible as it may feem to you), t'other Day he happen'd to spill a Glass of Claret upon a fine Damask Table-cloth, and broke the Glass; yet met with no other Reproof than an agreeable Laugh at his Aukwardness, and, It was well it was he that did it, who might do as he pleased with his own! Oh, what a happy Man, thought I, is this good old Batchelor!

But, my Dear, prepare for more strange Things still: Yesterday, at Dinner, he was cutting up a good fat Goose, and, by an unfortunate Splash, most grievously bespatter'd a rich Gown his Sister had on. My Heart ached upon this; for, truly, I thought, for a Moment, I was at home. But good Mrs. Terry convinced me of the contrary. Oh, Brother, faid she, with a Smile, what a Slip was that !---- But, Misfortunes will happen !---- And out the pulled her Pocket Handkerchief, to wipe her Gown. I am forry for it, Sister, said he. It can't be help'd, return'd she, with a Smile; but I had a good Mind to put you to some Expence for this. This was all she said, and she kept her Seat, and eat her Dinner in perfect good Temper; nay, and look'd as easy and as pleasant as she spoke. I must

I must still further observe, that, tho' all Things here are conducted with the greatest Decorum, and every Servant in the House knows their Duty, and does it diffinguishingly well, yet I have never heard one high or angry Word pass between Mrs. Terry and the Maids. Is not this furprifing, my Dear? What can it be owing to? I thought, for my Share, fo much have I been used to a contrary Management, that no Servant could do their Duty, unless the Mistress of the Family put herself out of Humour with all the House. Either she is more fortunate than you, in lighting of good Servants; or, perhaps, as Perfecution makes Schismaticks in the Church, fo finding Faults creates them in a Family. There may be fomething in this, my Dear; for I have feen your Maid Jane blunder, out of Fear; and blunder a second time, to find she had blunder'd; and a third, because she was put quite out, and could not help it. --- Then how has my poor Deary been discomposed! How have her charming Features been even distorted wich Passion! Not a Bit of the Lily in her Face; for the crimfon Rose had swallowed it all up; and an Eye darting Flames of Indignation and Woe mixed together! And then, breaking Silence, Nobody ever had fuch Torments of Servants as I have! Alas! poor Deary! How hard is thy Hap!---How much happier this good Family! For, secure of an Excuse, rather than Blame, if a small Fault should be committed, in comes each Servant, as their Duty requires, all serene, pleased, chearful, as their Mistress. Their Eye is fixed upon her Eye, with a becoming Confidence of pleasing; and a Nod, or a Beck, does more with them, than an hundred Words.

How can I, my Dear, think of leaving such a delightful House and Family as this?----Yet I long to fee my beloved Spouse; and I will set out on Monday next for that Purpose, with as great Delight as ever I knew, fince I had the Happiness to call you mine. But pray, my dear Love, let what I have faid, without the least Design to offend or concern you, a little impress you, however. Let me have the Satisfaction, for both our fakes, of feeing you get over some of those Foibles, that make us effectually unhappy, at times, as if we had fubstantial Evils to encounter with. In short, my Dear, let us think the House made for our Use, and not we for that. And let us shew our Servants, that while we would have them less faulty than they are, we will, ourfelves, try to be more perfect than we have hitherto been; and not, while we condemn their Failings, be guilty of much greater.

Justice, Prudence, Ease, Pleasure, Interest, Reputation, all require this of us: And could I hope what I have written will be attended to, as I wish and mean it, you cannot conceive the Delight that will double upon me on my Return to my Dearest;

for it is my Pride, that I can style myself

Yours ever, most affectionately.

the

to hac

Po

LETTER CLXVIII.

From a Gentleman who in a small Fortune experiences the Slights of his Friends; but being suddenly reputed to be rich, is oppressed with the fawning Caresses and Adulation of those who had before neglected him.

Dear Sir,

I MUST, for once, postpone every thing I would fay to you, in order to make room for an Account you little expect.

What

he

What will you fay, when I tell you, that a current Report of my being immensely rich is the greatest Misfortune I at present labour under? Nor do I find it so supportable as you may be apt to imagine. The Occasion was owing to the frequent Slights I had received from the Gentlewoman with whom I lodge, and from others of my Friends, who, believing that I lived up to my scanty Fortune, as in Truth I do (tho' I take care to be beholden to nobody, and pay ready Money for every thing), could not treat me negligently enough. I complain'd of this to that arch Wag Tony Richards, who told me he would change every one's Behaviour to me in a few Days. And he has done it effectually: For what does he do, but, as a kind of Secret, acquaints my Landlady, that beside my poor little Estate (which you know to be my All) he had lately difcovered, that I had Twenty thousand Pounds Stock in one of our great Companies!

Such was the Force of his whimfical Delusion, that, the very next Morning, I had a clean Towel hung over my Water-bottle, tho' I never before had more than one a Week during the Twenty Years I have lodged here.

About a Week after this, my Cousin Tom, who, for the two Years he has been in the Temple, has let me see him but three times, came, in a most complaisant manner, plainer dressed than ever I had before seen him; and begg'd, if the Length of the Evening was in any Degree burdensome, I would permit him to wait upon me with such Pieces of Wit, Humour, or Entertainment, as the Town afforded; the reading of which under my Ear, he was sure, would be a great Advantage to him; and assured me, that, for a Beginning, he had presumed to bring the last new Tragedy in his Pocket: I thank'd my young Spark. Upon which he is so much in earnest in his Observances, that three Nights in a Week he thus entertains me: Which will, at least, be of so much Service, as to keep him out of more expensive Company. And you cannot think what Pains the Rogue takes to read with the Cadence he knows I admire, and sits till his Teeth chatter before he offers to look towards the Fire.

What you will still more wonder at, Sir John Hookhim called upon me before Christmas; and tho' I have not had a Visit from him these Five Years, was so obliging, as to run away with me in his Chariot into Hertfordshire, to keep the Holidays in his Family; where his Lady treated me with the utmost Respect, and her Daughters paid me their Morning Devoirs, with the same Deserence as if I had been their Grand Papa. No Dinner was concluded upon, without consulting my Palate; and the young Gentlemen, his Sons, are as ambitious of my hearing their Exercises, as if their Fortunes depended upon my Approbation.

Sir John acquainted me with every Improvement he had made in his Estate; and assured me, that his second Son Will. my Namesake, has a Genius singularly turned for managing Country Business, had he not had the Missortune of having a Brother born before him; and gave me several Reasons to believe, that a fine Estate, which lay in the Neighbourhood, and was then to be sold, would be a great Penyworth. I took the Hint; but said, I had no Inclination to purchase: He shook his Head at my Thousands, and told me, that, in his Opinion, a Land Estate was preserable to the best Stock in the Kingdom.

When I came to Town the 4th of January, I was no sooner out of Sir John's Chariot, but my Landlady, in Person, informed me, that since I had been absent, I had so many Presents sent me, that she had been in an hundred Fears for their spoiling: I asked her the Particulars, and found Five Turkeys, Three Chines, Three Hampers of Madeira for the Gout, Two Collars of Brawn, Geefe, Chickens, Hares, and Wild-fowl, to a large Amount.

At Night I was welcom'd to Town by all my old Acquaintance, and about Twenty almost new ones: I was a little tired with my Journey; and had a flight Cold besides; which being observed, one was running for a Physician, another for a Surgeon, to bleed me: One thought an Emetick not improper: Another recommended a gentle Sweat, or composing Draught; and, amidst the general Officiousness, I could hear it whisper'd, that, if my Will was not made, Delays might prove dangerous: And, in the Morning, five Messengers after my Welfare arrived before Day.

Thus, Sir, you fee my Peace is gone; my Tongue is of no Use; for no one believes me, when I declare my real Circumstances: And, under the Happiness of a very small Fortune, I suffer all the Afflictions attending a Man immoderately rich; and if you keep not your usual Behaviour, I shall not know myfelf, nor any Man else; fince all my Companions are become Flatterers, and all around me are so obsequious, that it is impossible for me to know when I do right or wrong. I am, dear Sir, tho' thus whimfically fituated,

1-

d

n

ehad pick

, I my

e I had Your real Friend.

LETTER CLXIX.

From one Brother to another, on the rash Marriage of a beloved Daughter of one of them, to a profligate young Fellow.

My dear Brother,

I AM exceedingly concerned for the rash Step your Daughter Thomasin has made: I know how it must affect you, and I am myself not a little troubled at it. But we see how unfit we are to chuse for ourselves! And, oh! how often are we punished by the Enjoyment of our own Wishes !---You fay, you would rather have follow'd her Corpfe to the Grave, than that she should have thus thrown herself away on a Rake, a Prodigal, a Sot, and a Fool, as I, as well as you, know to be the Character of the Person she has chosen. I would not afflict you, my dear Brother, instead of pouring Balm on the Wounds of your Mind. But you will remember, that it is scarce two Years ago, when you were no less anxiously disturbed on Occasion of the violent Fever which then endangered her Life. What Vows did you not put up for her Recovery! What Tumults of Grief then agitated your afflicted Mind! And how do you know, that then she was only restor'd at your incessant and importunate Prayers; but that otherwise, God Almighty, knowing what was best for you both, would have taken her away from this heavy Evil? This should teach us Refignation to the Divine Will, and that we are most unfit to chuse for ourfelves: And even this Affliction, heavy as it is, may be fent, in order to wean you from a Delight that you had too much fet your Heart upon. Mean yo

pre

you

as y

after

of I

Plen

Grie

gling

natio

Mean time, you must not, by too violent a Refentment and Reprobation of her, which I find you are resolv'd upon, add to the Miseries she has chosen. The poor Creature, will, I fear, too soon find her Punishment in her Choice; and already, I understand, she is driven to great Distress. You know she has strong Passions, and your too great Severity may precipitate her on her everlasting Ruin, when she becomes thoroughly sensible of the Condition she has brought herself to, from as happy Prospects as any young Lady could promise herself.

Let this prevail upon you to allow her Necessaries; for, oh! 'tis a sad thing for meagre Want to stare in the Face a young Creature used to the sullest Plenty! especially when 'tis aggravated by the Reslection, that it is all owing to her own Rashness. And as it may not suit with your Liking, to appear yourself to allow her any thing, at least till you see what Use will be made of your Favours, I will undertake, as from myself, and on my own Head, to surnish, if you please, what is immediately necessary; and from time to time give you a faithful Account of the Disposition in which she receives it, and how her wretched Deluder is affected by it.

This is a Task I should not be fond of, but to prevent worse Consequences; and I must intreat you, Brother, to weigh seriously the Matter; and as you abound, let not the unhappy Wretch, who, after all, is your Daughter, want those Necessaries of Life, which all your Servants have in such Plenty.

d er

ed

iat

n-

11-th,

il?

ine

ur-

nay

that

lean

I could not bear to be a Witness of the great Griess which must tear asunder your Heart, struggling between paternal Affection, and just Indignation; which makes me chuse to write to you;

and

264 Familiar LETTERS on the and shall wait your Resolution on this Subject. I am, dear Brother, Yours most affectionately.

LETTER CLXX.

The afflitted Father, in Answer to the preceding.

Dear Brother,

VOU are very kind in your Intention, yet very affecting in your just Reproofs of my misplac'd Fondness for a Creature so unworthy. Resignation to the Divine Will, a noble, a needful Lesson! is the Doctrine you raise from it. God give it me, as I ought to have it! Time and His Grace, I hope, will effect it. But at present----Oh! Brother! you know not how I fet my Heart on this Wretch. That was my Crime, you'll fay: And 'tis but just it should be my Punishment. Do you as you please, in what you propose. I desire not the ingrateful Creature should want; yet let her too be pinch'd: Nothing else will make her fensible of her great Offence.---But don't let her be precipitated on any worse Fate, if a worse can be possible, as it may with regard to another Life. Yet let not her Seducer be the better for the Affistance. He shall never riot in my Substance. Let me know what you have done three Months hence, that I may retrench, or add to what you shall advance, as I shall see her Behaviour. I fay in three Months, for another Reason; because I may by that time, I hope, get more Strength of Mind and Patience than at prefent possesses the Heart of Your ever-affectionate Brother.

LETTER CLXXI.

To a Father on the Loss of his Son, who died under Age.

My dear Friend,

YOUR Lot, I confess, is hard, exceeding hard, to lose so promising and so hopeful a Child as that dear Boy was, who so much ingrossed the Affections of yourself and Spouse: And a suitable Grief on so trying an Occasion ought to be indulged; but yet not so, as if you were bereft of all Comfort, and insensible to those other great Mercies, which God has bestowed upon you. This, my dear Friend, would be a sinful Rejection of those Blessings which remain to you; as if, like froward Children, you would have nothing, because you could not have every thing you wish'd.

t

-

u

h, er

er

et

2.

cr.

T-

Look upon all the great Families of the Earth, upon all your Neighbours round you; and fee if they have not almost every one shed Tears on this very Occasion; and then judge of the Unreasonableness of too great a Grief, and what Pretension you have to be exempted from those Accidents, to which Royalty itself is liable. I will not, to alleviate your Grief, remind you of a Topick, which is, however, no less important than too frequently the Case, that he might not always have been so hopeful; but might, as he grew up, many ways have administered Bitterness to you. But I think it surpasses all other Comforts, even those you hoped for from him, that he is taken away at an Age, at which God's Mercy renders his eternal Happiness unquestionably certain; and you and your mourning Spouse have the Pleasure to reflect, that ye have been the happy Means of adding one to the Number of the Blest above; and that he is gone before you, but a little while, to that Place, where all all Tears shall be wiped away, and whither, thro' the same infinite Mercy, you will, in time, follow him, and enjoy him for ever.

You have this Comfort, that he dy'd a natural Death; that the Work was God Almighty's, who gave him to you, and has but taken back what he lent you: That you faw every thing done for his Recovery, that could be done; and that it pleafed God not to grant him to your Prayers; and why should you repine at the Dispensation, when you know the Dispenser? Let it therefore be your Duty, on this trying Occasion, to shew an intire Acquiescence to the Divine Will; such an Acquiescence as may be exemplary to your good Spouse, whose weaker Sex and Mind want all the Consolation your ftronger Reason can give her. And, at the same time, it behoves you to shew a thankful Spirit for the Mercies yet continued to you (Mercies that Thousands have not to rejoice in!), lest God Almighty should, as a Punishment, deprive you of those you have still left.

I beg you will take in good Part these few Lines, which my Affection for you has drawn from my Pen; and that you'll believe me to be, dear Sir,

Your truly sympathizing Friend, and humble Servant.

LETTER CLXXII.

To a Father, on the Loss of a hopeful Son, who died at Man's Estate.

SIR,

I AM truly forry for your Loss. So hopeful a Son, just arrived at Man's Estate, and who was so great a Comfort and Assistance to you, to be snatched away, paign

away, is what must administer to you the greatest Grief of any thing that could possibly befal you.

But, alas! yours is no new Case. The greatest Families have been thus afflicted, and with the Aggravation to some of them, that perhaps they have been deprived of their Heirs, and have not a Son left to continue their Name and Honours. The late Queen Anne, when Princess of Denmark, lost her beloved Duke of Gloucester, not only her Hopes, but the Hopes of the Nation; and the Crown, to which he feem'd not only born, but fashioned, was obliged to be fettled, on that Occasion, upon a distant Branch of the Royal Line.

The great Duke of MARLBOROUGH, who by his Merit, and his Victories, had raised a princely Estate, as well as Titles, had but one Son, the Marquis of Blandford, on whom he and his Duchess built all their Hopes, for the perpetuating of those new Honours in their Family; and he was fnatch'd away by Death, when he was at the University, training up to become the Dignities to which he was intitled.

Still more recent was the unhappy Fate of a Lady of the first Quality in England. Her Lord had a Son lent to his advanced Years. This Son was the last of that noble Family, and on his Life depended all his Father's and his Mother's Hopes; and on his living till of Age, a valuable Part of the Estate itself, which otherwise was to fall to an illegitimate Offspring. What Care was not used to preferve the noble Youth! An eminent Physician was taken into the Family, to be made a constant Watchman, as it were, over his Health and Exer-The young Nobleman himself was hopeful, dutiful, and as diffinguished in the Graces of his Mind, as by his Birth. He travelled; his indulgent Mother travelled with him : He made a Cam-N 2 paign under his Uncle, the greatest General then furviving in an Age of Generals. He again travel'd to reflore and confirm his Health, and all the noble Mother's Hopes and Views were employ'd on the finding for her beloved Son, on his Return, a Wife fuitable to his Quality, and who might be a Means to preserve one of the first Families in the Kingdom from utter Extinction.

What was the Event of all her Cares, her Hopes, her Vows, her Prospects? --- Why, just as the young Nobleman had (within a few Months) arrived at Age, and could have made those Family Settlements which were most desirable should be made, and the want of which involv'd his noble Mother in perplexing Law-fuits, which, too, turn'd against her; it pleased God to deprive her of him, and he dy'd in a foreign Land, far distant from his fond Mother, who (still more grievous, if true!), for Reasons of State, as was faid, had been deny'd to accompany and attend him: And so ended all her Hopes of above twenty Years standing, and in him his Family likewise.

A still more recent Calamity to a great Family, I might mention, in the Death of two hopeful Children, the only Sons of their Father, and the only Heirs Male of one of the first Families in the Kingdom, both fnatch'd away, in the Space of a few Hours of one another, from healthy Constitutions, and no Ailments previous to the fudden one that carry'd them off, which was only believ'd to be In vain were the Confultations of a fore Throat. the most eminent Physicians and Surgeons, who gave Attendance all Night, minutely to watch every Change of the Distemper; in vain prov'd the Affurance of the Skilful to the fond Parents, that there was no Danger. Death mocked all their Hopes; and when the first dy'd, in vain was he open'd, in order to find out, if possible, the Cause of the fatal Malady, in order to administer, with greater Hopes of Success, Remedies against it, to preserve the other. That other hopeful Youth followed his Brother, and their Fate deeply wounded the Hearts of half a dozen noble Families, whose intimate Relationship gave them a very near Interest in the awful Event.

Like Instances of the Loss of hopeful Sons, and of the only Male Heirs, might be produced in other Families of prime Distinction in the List of the British Nobility; but I need not enumerate more to a Mind considerate as yours, which will reslect, that Death is a common Lot, from which no Rank or Degree is exempted. And I hope these Reslections, and such as you will be able to add to them by your own Reason and Piety, will serve to rebuke the Overslowings of your Grief, and confine it to the natural Chanels, into which both God and Nature will indulge it to flow.

I mention not to your inlightened Mind, you fee, the Motives, that, nevertheless, might be infifted on with great Propriety, on fo grievous an Occasion; such as, The Uncertainty of Life: The Gratitude you ought to shew for having had your Son fo long continu'd to you, as he was: The great Probability of his being happy in God's Mercies, by reason of his Hopefulness and Duty: The early Release he has met with from the Troubles and Chances of a changeable and transitory Life: His Escape from the Danger of the Temptations which his Virtue might have been tried with, had he lived to maturer Years: That this your Deprivation is God's Work: That he dy'd not in a distant Land, and by an untimely Death: But that you had the Satisfaction of knowing, that every thing was done for him that could be done: That his Morals were still untainted, and he was not cut off in the Purfuit of some capital Sin, as has too often often been the Case with bold and daring Spirits in the Heat of their youthful Passions: And that he escap'd the Snares usually laid for young Men by idle Companions, and vicious Women, which too often intangle and catch the unthinking Mind. These will be all suggested to you from your own better Reason; and to that secondarily, as to a due Resignation to the Divine Will primarily, let me refer you, on this trying Occasion: Who am, with a sympathizing Affection, dear Sir,

Your sincere Friend, and humble Servant.

LETTER CLXXIII.

To a * Widow, on the Death of her Husband.

Good Madam,

A LLOW me the Liberty of condoling with you on the truly great and heavy Loss you have fustain'd of an excellent Husband. All we, who had the Pleasure of his Friendship, mourn, with you, the irretrievable Misfortune to us, as well as to you. But as there is no recalling it, and as it is God's Doing, we must not repine at the Dispensation, but acquiesce in it. And yet to fay, that neither you nor we ought to grieve for it, would be abfurd and unnatural. Sinful Grief, however, we are commanded to shun: And we ought to bless God, that he was graciously pleased to continue him with us fo long, instead of mourning too heavily, that we had not longer the Pleasure of his agreeable Conversation. We were not born together, and some of us must have gone first; and I have sometimes been

^{*} With small Variations, the same Arguments may be used to a Husband on the Death of his Wife, and on other melancholy Occasions of the like Nature.

been ready to think (besides the Life of Glory, which, thro' God's Mercies, awaits the Good), that he is far happier than those he leaves behind him, in this Point, That he is saved from the Regret (which fills the wounded Hearts of his surviving Friends) of seeing them go before him, as they have seen him go before them. Had he not dy'd now, a few Years would have determin'd his useful Life; for the longest Life is but a Span; and then the Matter, had he gone before us, would have been as it is now.

We may make our own Lives miserable in bewailing his Lofs; but we cannot do him Good, nor (were he to know it) Pleasure. You, in particular, Madam, who are now call'd upon to be both Father and Mother to the dear Pledges of your mutual Affection, ought to take double Care, how you fuffer immoderate Grief to incapacitate you from this new. and more arduous and necessary Task. For by this means you would not only do yourself Hurt, but double the Loss which his dear Children have already fustain'd in that of their Father. And would you, Madam, make them motherless as well as fatherless? --- God forbid! Consider, tho' this is a heavy Case, yet it is a common Case. And we must not repine, that God Almighty thought him ripe for Heaven, and put an End to his probatory State.

With melancholy Pleasure have I often, on the Loss of Friends, contemplated the excellent Advice of the Son of Sirach, who tells us how we ought to mourn on these Occasions, and how we ought to govern our Mourning; and reminds us most excellently, that while we are grieving for our departed Friends, our own Lives pass away, and we are not. You will permit me to transcribe his own excellent Words, as most suitable to the Subject before us:

r

d

e

1,

h ve

n-

ne

es

ay

on een

272 Familiar LETTERS on, &c.

"My Son, says he, let Tears fall down over the Dead, and begin to lament; and then cover his Body according to the Custom, and neglect not his Burial. Weep bitterly, and make great Moan, and use Lamentation as he is worthy.... And then comfort thyself for thy Heaviness; for of Heaviness cometh Death; and the Heaviness of the Heart breaketh Strength. In Affliction

" also Sorrow remaineth; and the Life of the Poor " for Miserable, or of those who make themselves " fo by Mourning] is the Curse of the Heart. Take " [therefore] no Heaviness to Heart: Drive it " away; and remember [thy own] last End. Force get it not; for there is no turning again: Thou " shalt not do him Good, but hurt thyself. " member MY Judgment [faith the wife Man, 66 speaking as if in the Person of our late dear " Friend]; for THINE also shall be so. Yesterday 66 for ME, and To-day for THEE. " Dead is at Rest, let his Remembrance rest; and 66 be comforted for him, when his Spirit is departed " from him." To add any thing to this excellent Advice, would be, in some measure, to depreciate it. I will therefore conclude with my Prayers, that God will enable you to bear as you ought, and as all your Friends with and expect from you, this truly heavy Difpenfation, and that most particularly for the fake of your dear Children by him; and with affuring you of my Service, to the utmost of my Ability: For

I am, Madam, as well for theirs and your own fake,

FINIS.

Your faithful Friend, and humble Servant,

as for his Memory's fake, ver for ness ion oor ves ake it for nou Rean, ear day the and ted uld re-ble ads en-of rou for ke, nt.